4 shot and buried in snow; woman walks 12 hours to get help

FT. LEONARD WOOD, Mo. AP) — An Army sergeant was being held today after a young woman who had been shot and buried in the snow with three dead companions directed authorities to the burial sites.

The FBI said the sergeant would be taken before the U.S. magistrate in Springfield later in the day to face charges in the deaths of three young people and the wounding of the fourth.

"She had walked about six miles over some of the roughest terrain you can imagine with wounds from a .45-caliber weapon," an FBI spokesman said of the only survivor, Juanita Decker, 19, of nearby Lynchburg.

She apparently walked for about 12 hours before she was picked up by a motorist after staggering out of the heavily wooded area. The bodies were found in a remote section of Fort Leonard Wood later Thursday evening.

Temperatures during the period of her walk dipped to about 15 and never got above freezing. There was 7 inches of snow on the ground. "The terrain is very rugged," the FBI spokesman said. "Regular vehicles can't even get in there. Four-wheel drive vehicles are needed to get into the area for the investigation."

The young woman was taken to Pulaski County Hospital Thursday night, where she was reported in fair condition. She had been shot twice, once in the breast and arm, and a doctor described her wounds as superficial.

The sergeant was picked up Thursday night by an Army provost marshal in connection with the slaying of Anthony Lee Bates, 18, Wesley Hawkins, 18, and Linda Needham, 16, all of Plato.

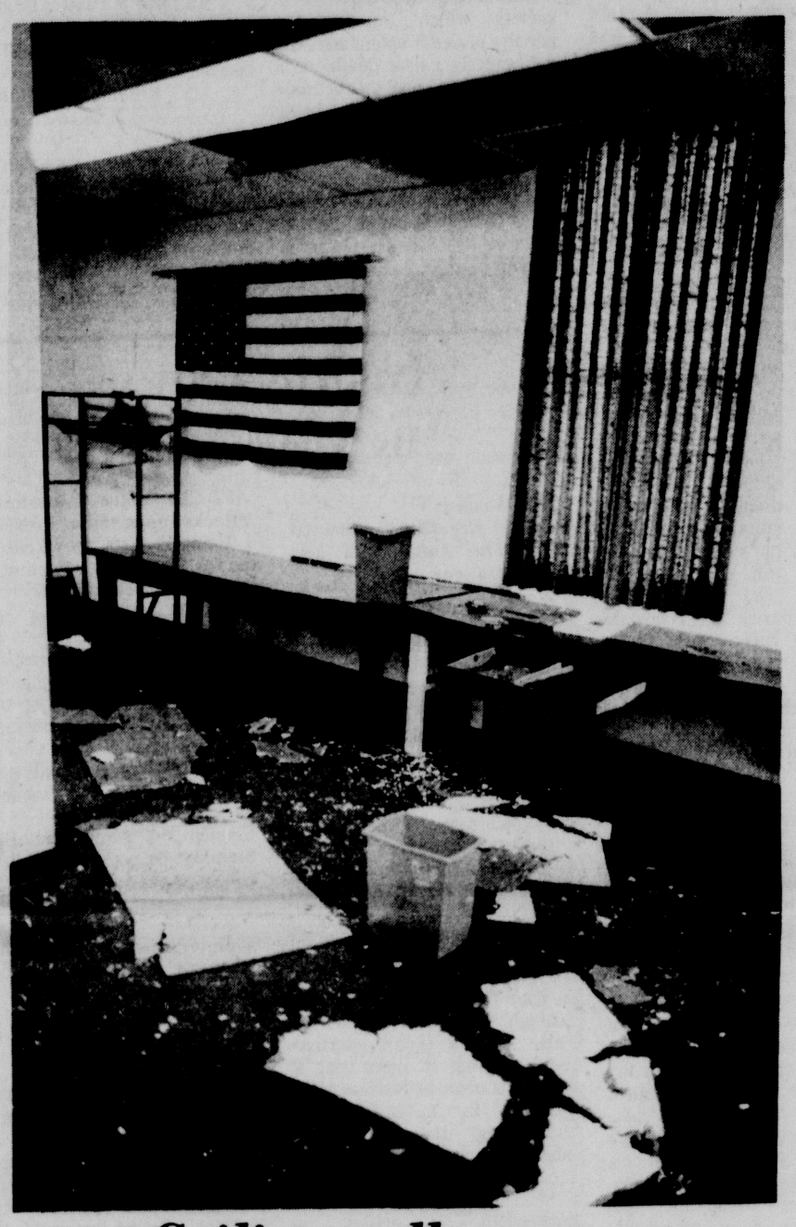

Bill Williams, the agent in charge of the Kansas City FBI office, said most of the information for the arrest was provided by Ms. Deckard.

Williams said the victims were apparently driving through the base on a double date when they were stopped by a man driving a vehicle similar to those used by military police.

Agents at the scene said the youths' car was disabled by the driver of the second vehicle and they were forced to accompany him.

Sometime after midnight, the four were driven to the south part of the base, where they were shot. Williams said all four, including Ms. Deckard, who pretended to be unconscious, were buried in snow.

It was not immediately known if any of them might have been employed on the post or was connected with anyone stationed or employed there.

Ceiling collapses

Heavy rain during the night caused damage to the council chamber in the City Administrative Building here. Assistant City Manager Bill Whitlock said a drain on roof had frozen over and caused water to back up. The ceiling collapsed under the weight of the water which poured through early this morning. Plat books lying on the tables were soaked by the water.

Ice blocks towboat activity on river

City officials discovered this morning an axiom known by every child who ever played in the mud after a rain storm flowing water follows the path of lease resistence.

In this case, the path of least resistence sent the water pouring through the ceiling of the Council chamber at the City Administrative Building.

Assistant City Manager Bill Whitlock said the problem stemmed from a drain frozen over with ice. The water could not flow over the roof, so it went through it.

The water caved in several ceiling tiles and poured onto the rug and plat books sitting on tables.

The city purchased tiles to replace the ceiling before, but the new tiles had not yet been installed, Whitlock said.

A Chrleston man received minor injuries when the eastbound pickup truck he was driving ran off an icy road and overturned on Highway 62 in Bertrand.

4 charged in kidnaping

CHARLESTON — A motive for the Wednesday night kidnaping of John Wayne Davis, 24, of East Prairie has not been established. However, kidnaping charges were filed against two East Prairie men Thursday, and charges of tampering with a witness of the alleged kidnaping were filed against two other persons, Sheriff Norris Grissom said today.

Charged with kidnaping are Richard Oliphant and Rickie Jackson of East Prairie. Bonds for the two, who remained in custody, were set at $20,000 each. A third East Prairie man, Dale Crump, is still being sought on the same charge.

Grissom said Joyce Gore and Kevin Johnson of East Prairie are being held in Mississippi County jail under bonds of $500 each, following their arrest Thursday afternoon on charges of tampering with a witness. The two reportedly threatened Randy Williams of East Prairie, who witnessed the abduction Wednesday night.

The kidnap victim was in a car about 9 p.m. Wednesday with Oliphant, Randy Williams and Clarence Davis. Reportedly, Oliphant suggested they go to a party east of town.

A short distance from town on a county road, they stopped at the suggestion of Oliphant. Two men, reported to be Jackson and Crump, came up to the car armed with a pistol and shotgun.

Davis was ordered from the car, bound and gagged, and placed in the back seat of another car. Sometime later, he was put in the trunk of the car, where he freed himself by using a tire tool to pry open the trunk.

SIDC elects 7 directors

Seven men were elected Wednesday to three-year terms on the board of directors of Sikeston Industrial Development Corporation.

Elected were Thomas Gilmore, Ray Clinton, Charles Blanton III, Bernard Rice, Lonnie Standley, Bill Ryan and James M. Beaird.

The SIDC board will meet at noon Jan. 25 at the Ramada Inn to elect officers for 1977.

Receives $45,169

BENTON — Scott County Treasurer Hess Porter, presented the County Court Thursday with a check for $45,169, which represented the county's share of revenue sharing funds for the fourth quarter of 1976.

Porter, also reported receiving a letter from the Department of the Treasury, Washington D.C., which explains that Scott County will receive a total of $187,774 for the year 11977, based on unemployment figures of the county.

The amount to be received in 1977 is $7,098 more than that received in 1976, Porter said. Quarterly amounts to be received, Porter said, will be $46,943.50, an increase of $1,774.50 each quarter.

The court authorized the treasurer to invest $155,000 from various county accounts in CD certificates with the Bank of Sikeston for a 30-day period.

Dexter woman dies in fire

DEXTER— Jacquelyn Viola Davis, 39, died Thursday morning in a fire which destroyed her home.

Stoddard County Coroner Ray Rainey said this morning the investigation has not been completed and the only thing known for sure is that her body was found in a corner of the kitchen area.

Rainey said the cause of death was apparently due to both smoke inhalation and burns.

Firemen were called to the scene about 10:45 a.m., but the fire had apparently started some time before it was spotted by neighbors, Fire Chief Al Banken said.

Banken said no one knew if anybody was in the house when firemen arrived, but they suspected someone was inside and treated it that way.

Firemen entered the house soon after arrival, but the smoke was so thick they did not find the woman's body at first. After fighting the fire down, they went back inside and found it.

Rainey was called to the scene about 11 a.m.

Dexter porno trial scheduled April 11

BLOOMFIELD -- The case involving the city of Dexter's antipornograph ordianance and the manager of a drive-in theater who allegedly showed a "dirty movie" continues to work its way through the court system as Judge Flake McHaney has set April 11 as the date of trial in Stoddard County Circuit Court.

McHaney also ordered that all motions will be heard Feb. 16.

One of the motions to be acted on is a motion for acquittal, filed last week by defense attorneys on behalf of Clyde Costin, who was convicted in Dexter City Court last month of violating the city ordinance.

Costin was convicted by a municipal court jury of showing the movie, "Pleasure is My Business", last month at Family Drive-In in Dexter.

In the defense's motion for acquittal, it was claimed that the trial and conviction of the defendant in municipal court violated his constitutional rights, that the ordinance itself is unconstitutional and vague and that the ordinance is an unconstitutional prior restraint.

The movie was also closed down without a court order or any prior judicial decision concerning the film, the petition continues, and thus was a "flagrant violation" of the defendant's constituonal rights.

In addition, the movie is not obscene, the defense claims.

The motion is similar to one filed by the defense in City Court, which was overruled by Judge Herb Aarant without reading it.

In the municipal trial, which took place Dec. 7, the jury was not allowed to see the movie in question to determine for itself if the movie is obscene.

The defense has entered a not guilty plea in Circuit Court, and has demanded a jury trial.

FICTION VS. REALITY

Let it be noted for posterity that one of the chief characteristics of television entertainment these days is the great popularity of what some call "cops and robbers" films. Let it also be noted that the TV dramatizations bear little resemblance to the real- life, day- to- day functions of a police department. On any given evening of the week, the boob-tube versions of law enforcement officers will use up enough ammunition (whether rifle, shotgun, pistol or tommy gun) to supply the average, real-life police department for several years.

On the other hand, some of the real- life experiences of our boys in blue surpass the wildest imaginations of the film script writers. Recently, for example, Patrolman Henry J. Wennmaker of the Westerly, Rhode Island police force responded to an emergency call from a man's home. He was met at the door by the distraught occupant, who informed him that invisible dwarfs had brazenly invaded his home and were causing a terrible commotion. At that very moment, one of them was raising a ruckus in the kitchen, while the rest were in the cellar.

Obviously, here was a situation that demanded some quick, cool, and decisive action. More than that, it was necessary for Wennmaker to come up with the correct procedure, independently determined, since there was, he knew, nothing in the index of his policeman's manual under "invisible dwarfs." Also, it would be quite a problem to snap the handcuffs on even one of the little fellows, much less a whole bunch of them.

Fortunately, Wennmaker didn't panic in the face of this crisis. A cop of experience, he knew just what to do. Sternly, in his most gruff "pull over to the curb" tone of voice, he ordered the one dwarf in the kitchen to leave. Then he went to the basement and told the others to leave. "The dwarfs left," he wrote in his report with a straight face, "without incident." Whereupon the relieved and grateful occupant thanked Wennmaker for his assistance, and our hero continued on his rounds.

Okay, Hollywood. Come up with a story to beat that one!

BETTY FORD'S RECORD is pretty good. Her courage in facing breast surgery two years ago is well remembered. She has spoken out openly and frankly on controversial issues such as her daughter's love life, marijuana and abortion.

But it was more than candor that prompted her to leap into the Plains Baptist Church incident. Rev. Clennon King, whose personal history is shady enough to make anyone doubt his motives, set himself up to be turned away from Carter's hometown church. President Ford's wife reacted by saying the church was segregated "and it's obvious that's how he (Carter) feels about the problem of segregation."

Carter has made it clear that's not how he feels about it.

But it certainly shocked anyone who expected better things of Betty Ford. Shocked—and saddened.

SENDING FOOD DETERS PRODUCTION EFFORTS

We seem to be in a period of remission from what could yet be mankind's terminal illness—uncontrolled population growth, with accompanying widespread and chronic starvation.

While world population is far from stabilized, growth rates have been declining in the underdeveloped countries and experts are revising their former projections that the number of people on the globe will double by the year 2000.

As for food, the United States is "awash in an ocean of excess wheat," say Department of Agriculture economists, and they see little prospect of the Soviet Union or any other country buying enough in 1977 to bolster the currently depressed price for farmers.

They predict that U.S. wheat storage, already the largest since the 1960s, could grow to almost a billion bushels by next June.

Nevertheless, the United States, Canada and, to a lesser extent, Australia remain the world's only producers of surplus grain (a fact which continues to be staunchly ignored by the proponents of Socialist economies).

Thus one or two disastrous growing seasons in the developing world could revive the temporarily abated controversy over the extent of the moral obligation of Americans to feed the world's starving and, if necessary, to lower their own standards of living to do so.

Noted British economist Barbara Ward recently pointed out that at least one-third of the increased world demand for food in the past 10 years has come from North Americans, Europeans and Russians eating steadily more high-protein food. Grain is fed to animals and poultry and eaten as steaks and eggs.

In real energy terms, she says, this is about five times more wasteful than eating grain itself. The result is an average American diet of nearly 2,000 pounds of grain a year, compared to only 400 pounds for the average person in India.

The implication of this and similar statements is that if the people of the richer countries used less grain—largely by reducing the consumption of livestock products—the poorer people of the world would be better fed.

Such a conclusion is "clearly incorrect," contends D. Gale Johnson, provost of the University of Chicago and professor of economics.

Those who advocate reducing grain consumption in high income countries fail to understand the close connections between demand and supply affecting food production, he says. "It is simply not possible to reduce demand and assume that supply will remain the same."

From 1968 through 1971, in fact, producers in the major exporting countries were restricting grain production because there was not enough demand for grain at acceptable prices. If domestic use of grain had been reduced, much less would have been invested in agricultural research and the production capacity of the major exporting countries would be much lower today than it actually is.

Not only this, says Johnson, but past experience indicates that large-scale food aid contributes relatively little to the food supply of developing countries. Such aid has served as a powerful deterrent by permitting recipient governments to lower the priority that they gave to agricultural research and investment, and farmers were adversely affected by lower prices than would have existed.

Improvement in per capita food consumption in the developing countries will depend primarily upon increasing food production in those countries, says Johnson, and on this score he is "cautiously optimistic" that the people of the developing world will be better fed a decade hence than they are now.

"Agriculture is one of the world's most dynamic activities," he says. "Farmers, even those who are illiterate or who have little education, have demonstrated that when there is a profitable opportunity, they will seize it."

THE STATES MUST PUT UP OR SHUT UP

It is both fortunate and unfortunate that the question of capital punishment should today be so sharply focused on the person of one Gary Mark Gilmore.

It is fortunate because, if we are going to resume executions, of all the hundreds of condemned men occupying death rows, none may so richly deserve death than this man who wantonly and coldbloodedly murdered a motel clerk in Utah (and was charged with but not tried for a second similar murder).

Gilmore is obviously a menace to society. He is also obviously a profoundly disturbed individual, as the flood of stories about his antics have made plain—his demand that he be executed by firing squad, his request to marry the woman who jilted him, their aborted suicide pact.

Gilmore has become a celebrity, and that is what is unfortunate. We hear about Gilmore the psychotic; we forget about Gilmore the murderer.

Even if the board which is to make the final decision early in December gives him what he wants, it is going to be very difficult for the state of Utah to become the first state to execute a prisoner since 1967.

So many people have become so emotionally involved with Gilmore that we can expect a tremendous outpouring of protest. Few of those protesting, however, will be able to tell you the names of his victims.

The fact that Gilmore prefers to die rather than be imprisoned for life, and is apparently determined to find some way to execute himself if the state will not oblige him, is something else that those who oppose capital punishment would just as soon not think about.

But which is more barbaric—a society which imposes the penalty of death upon those who deliberately cause death, or a society which lacks the fortitude to do so, and yet cannot bring itself to abolish capital punishment once and for all?

Gary Gilmore has in effect told the state of Utah, and every other state with capital punishment on its books, to put up or shut up.

P.S. TO THE NEWS

AFRICAN 'LIBERATION'
By PHYLLIS SCHAFLY
Copley News Service

The stalemate of the talks on Rhodesia has dismayed those pushing hard for a prompt and painless changeover from white-minority to black-majority rule.

Those advocating overt or covert U.S. financing for an invasion of the prosperous, peaceful government of Rhodesia should reflect on other examples of enforced "liberation" in Africa.

The customary result of Communist-style liberation is social and political chaos, a drastic decline in economic production, a breakdown in transportation and communications and terror tactics against political opponents.

In the mid-fifties, a Communist terror organization called the Federation for National Liberation started the move to liberate Algeria from French rule. Thousands of Moslems were killed, mutilated or tortured during several years of bloodshed.

In the early 1960s, the "liberators" chased the Belgians out of the Congo and replaced them with a Communist, Premier Patrice Lumumba. An outstanding anti-Communist black, Moise Tshombe, then led Katanga in seceding from the Congo.

The United Nations, which does not approve of black majority rule if it is anti-Communist, then raised an army and invaded Katanga. After 14 months of this U.N. war, Katanga was subdued. This U.N. war cost $420 million, of which the United States was persuaded to pay more than half.

Five neighboring countries of Rhodesia announced on Sept. 26, 1976, that their guerrilla war against Rhodesia would continue until Prime Minister Ian Smith accepts their plan for black majority rule. Most of these countries do not themselves permit majority rule.

Since Mozambique ousted the Portuguese and established a Communist dictatorship, thousands of people have been arbitrarily rounded up and imprisoned. Mozambique even held three American missionaries up to 13 months without any charges, and jailed another American for 35 days after arresting him while reading a map of Africa on a city street.

After Portugal was chased out of Angola, the U.S. State Department encouraged South African forces to intervene and defend Angola against a Cuban-Soviet takeover.

The South Africans did so and pushed the Cubans back hundreds of miles. However, when the South Africans did not receive the U.S. aid necessary to protect their troops, they pulled out and the Cubans, equipped with Soviet weapons, conquered all of Angola.

For months, Secretary of State Henry Kissinger has appeared eager for Rhodesia to surrender to its invaders. On his African visit last fall, he promised millions of U.S. dollars to Mozambique, Zambia and Tanzania even after they threatened to invade Rhodesia. There is no authority in the U.S. Constitution for a secretary of state to promise U.S. taxpayers' money to induce or support an invasion of a friendly country.

Some commentators have speculated that the explanation for this unprecedented behavior is that Kissinger was concerned lest a Soviet defeat in Africa interfere with the SALT II talks. Others conjecture that the purpose for his monetary promises was to win a large black vote for President Ford who had promised, if reelected, to continue Kissinger as secretary of state.

It is a tragedy if Kissinger has opened up Rhodesia to the kind of liberation visited on Algeria, the Congo and Angola for the sake of a campaign ploy. Black Americans have too much good sense to be fooled by such an election scheme.

Inside Labor
By Victor Riesel

Carter Warned:

Labor prepares confidential agenda for battle with new administration

WASHINGTON— Grandpa (George) Meany, who works in oils, won't sell like Grandma Moses, but the AFL-CIO chief daubs well enough to have 27 of his paintings put on exhibition during the week of Jimmy Carter's inauguration. Neither event will draw crowds from the other. But there's a surrealist symbolism to the competition.

The feud between George Meany and Jimmy Carter is one of the most scintillating conversation pieces in town. Mr. Carter's young legions, who haven't really done their homework, are scoffing at "the old man." They've been walking through a dream sequence. They simply don't realize they're taking on more than a handful of union officials around Meany. In mocking and challenging the 82-year-old labor leader, Carter's clusters are solidifying the movement behind Meany. And that movement, in effect, is America's most powerful political-industrial complex.

It will stonewall Jimmy Carter, President or no President, if he doesn't deliver on his written and oratorical promises to them. He doesn't know it yet, but that's because even such bright political minds as transition leader Jack Watson (who has been wandering around the Rose Garden) believe the White House is more powerful than the House of Labor across Lafayette Park.

Had any of Mr. Carter's capital "clusters" sat in on the AFL-CIO's small eighth floor conference room from 10 a.m. to almost 2 p.m. Monday (Jan. 10) they would have had an instant Washington education. An instant guide to what Congress is all about.

For some four hours the AFL-CIO's National Legislative Action Committee studied the 11-page agenda prepared for it at Meany's direction. Had the Carter tacticians known anything about the movement's operation they'd have chilled. Rarely does Meany submit an agenda.

But this time it was all down on paper -- all the way from the economic blast which the committee hurled at President-elect Carter, to international policy suggestions.

An angry Meany, the veteran of all Washington's veterans, was preparing for battle. Seldom has there been such a political war council. Meany had called in heads of many AFL-CIO departments. Some of them not usually visible men. But powerful men. And the federation's lobbyists and technicians. It was an intense session. Startling to insiders. When it was over they charged an incoming President, their own candidate, with running in "retreat."

And with awarding "tax gifts" to industry. That's what they've said about Jerry Ford.

Later, many commentators said that the honeymoon was over. They are uninformed. The political love-making was over weeks ago. What's happening now appears to be preparation for annulment. Never has George Meany and an official AFL-CIO national committee attacked an incoming President.

Being realists, they know his power. But being pragmatists, they know their own power. For example, they know that Charles Schultze, the new chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, plans to call them in and jawbone them on this year's wage demands. His message will be -- cool it if you don't want official wage-price guidelines. Or, exposure on the witness stand of the Council on Wage and Price Stability. Or perhaps eventually even a wage freeze.

Well, the labor leaders may simply decide to ignore Chairman Schultze. They've walked out on Presidents and White Houe officials before. Many times. And they can do it again.

They can strike for anything they wish. And basically there isn't much the President of the U.S. can do about such walkouts. Get tough, yes. Talk tough, yes. But you can't dig coal with National Guard bayonets. Or run a steel mill.

Now note this: part of labor's agenda calls for a drive to raise the national minimum wage from the current $2.30 an hour to $3. Perhaps with a built-in cost of living formula. President Carter won't go for that. And his Secretary of Labor, Ray Marshall, will have to go up the Hill and testify against such proposals. Labor would then split from the administration and clobber Marshall. This is exactly what happened to former Secretgary of Labor Pete Brennan -- once a powerful Building and Construction union official. Meany ground Brennan into the dust, though some of the latter's aides mockingly said they could crack the "old man" like Humpty Dumpty without a wall.

And there are other ways of unloosing the legislative barrage programmed on that 11-page agenda. Just wait for the AFL-CIO Executive Council midwinter session in Bal Harbour, Fla. Secretary Marshall plans to fly down. And he'd better have a defrosting plan. I've seen Meany freeze cabinet officers in an improvised waiting room while he council calmly deliberated on other matters behind locked doors.

And always, a hundred or so print and TV news people record every bit is this diffident treatment.

President Carter, who then will have been in office just about a month, just about long enough to lose the virginal provincial view of labor, will get the message. So, also, will he when labor's congressional allies begin shoveling up bills costing billions on billions of dollars asking for everything from the creation of a White House-level Office of Maritime Affairs Coordinator to assisting the construction unions as much as he helps to make inner-city jobs for minorities.

Mr. Carter soon will be in the big time. And labor is preparing to give him a hard time unless he stops his "retreat from the goals which we (labor -- VR) understood President-elect Carter to have set during last year's campaign." That's a razor-sharp warning.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Did Unspent Ford Funds Cause Defeat?

by Jack Anderson and Les Whitten

WASHINGTON — President Ford's campaign aides may have blown the election for him by failing to spend $1.7 million that was available for last-minute TV spots, voter drives and speaking campaigns.

The extra money, a White House aide told us bitterly, would have put the president over the top. Other aides agreed, some of them less certainly, that the incredible miscalculation may have cost him the election. At least in the key state of Ohio, GOP strategists suggested, the money could have made a difference.

The $1.7 million went unspent, ironically, because of the president's determination to keep his campaign free of any Watergate-style financial abuses. At secret meetings in Washington during September, the Ford strategists carefully analyzed the new election law.

It allowed both candidates to spend $21.8 million of their own campaign funds. But the Republicans had come up with another $3.2 million which could be spent, quite legally, by the president's campaign committee.

The money came out of the till of the Republican National Committee. But Ford's campaign chief, Jim Baker, prudently insisted that up to $750,000 should be held back to make sure the president didn't exceed the legal limit.

So the spending rate was kept down. The Ford campaign, meanwhile, began to pick up momentum. As the president gained on Jimmy Carter in the polls, the Republican National Committee urged the campaign committee to loosen the purse strings.

But it was mid-October before the president's campaign aides realized they had been spending money far too slowly. By then, programs to enlist black voters and to step up TV promotion in several key states had already been rejected as too expensive.

Hurried meetings were called, but it was too late to spend the money usefully. On the day after the election, the beaten Ford campaigners began to add up their expenditures. The latest tally shows that Ford could have spent from $1.7 to $1.8 million more than he did.

At the Republican National Committee, a spokesman said bluntly that "we had it available to be spent." The implication was that the president's campaign committee had been too miserly.

A spokesman for the campaign committee acknowledged: "We were disappointed we didn't spend the budgeted amounts. We were conscious of the requirements of the new law and the excesses of the past. We wanted to be damned certain we were within it."

It was pure conjecture, he added, to blame Ford's defeat on the $1.7 million miscalculation.

Suggestion Box: The taxpayers provide their top leaders with chauffeur-driven limousines to get around Washington. The government bigwigs like their limousines to be warm in the winter and cool in the summer. Obliging chauffeurs, therefore, often idle the motors so the limousines will be comfortable when their bosses board them.

A federal employee, writing to the National Suggestion Box, pointed out that both money and gasoline could be saved if the drivers would stop running their motors while they wait. This simple suggestion, he said, would help achieve three government goals: it would conserve gasoline, reduce pollution and save the taxpayers' money.

The suggestion was submitted to all the major federal departments and agencies. Not a single one offered to implement the idea. Only the General Services Administration responded at all, saying it had included the suggestion in a three-page bulletin.

"If you can provide specific information about abuses," responded the GSA, "we will be pleased to pursue them." The agency promised to take "appropriate action" if "the vehicle and the incident can be identified."

The only way this wasteful practice can be stopped, in other words, is for citizens to report the idling limousines. We'll be happy to forward the reports to the GSA. Be sure to specify the date, place and limousine license number.

All communications should be sent to the NATIONAL SUGGESTION BOX, P.O. Box 2009, Washington, D.C. 20013.

Watergate Pardons: President Ford has received a dribble of letters urging a blanket pardon for the Watergate criminals, but he has "given no consideration to executive clemency," a high White House source told us.

None of the Watergate defendants has asked the White House for a pardon. Lawyers for ex-Attorney General John Mitchell considered making an appeal for clemency. But in the end, they decided not even to recommend it to their client. "We felt it would have been useless," a Mitchell attorney told us.

Footnote: As we previously reported and the White House confirmed, Nixon's ousted vice president, Spiro Agnew, sounded out the White House about a pardon through his attorney. Newspaper stories about the Agnew pardon, incidentally, implied that we had fouled up the details. The stories indicated we had reported incorrectly that Agnew's attorney called presidential counsel Philip Buchen. In fact, we accurately reported the call had been made to Buchen's office, not to Buchen himself.

Assassination Files: The FBI never opened its files on the John F. Kennedy assassination to the Warren Commission.

The commission members were in such awe of the late FBI director, J. Edgar Hoover, that they never dared ask for the files, but depended upon what the FBI wished to provide, inside sources say.

The special House committee which is now investigating the assassination will belatedly request the full FBI files.

FICTION VS. REALITY

Let it be noted for posterity that one of the chief characteristics of television entertainment these days is the great popularity of what some call "cops and robbers" films. Let it also be noted that the TV dramatizations bear little resemblance to the real- life, day- to- day functions of a police department. On any given evening of the week, the boob-tube versions of law enforcement officers will use up enough ammunition (whether rifle, shotgun, pistol or tommy gun) to supply the average, real-life police department for several years.

On the other hand, some of the real- life experiences of our boys in blue surpass the wildest imaginations of the film script writers. Recently, for example, Patrolman Henry J. Wennmaker of the Westerly, Rhode Island police force responded to an emergency call from a man's home. He was met at the door by the distraught occupant, who informed him that invisible dwarfs had brazenly invaded his home and were causing a terrible commotion. At that very moment, one of them was raising a ruckus in the kitchen, while the rest were in the cellar.

Obviously, here was a situation that demanded some quick, cool, and decisive action. More than that, it was necessary for Wennmaker to come up with the correct procedure, independently determined, since there was, he knew, nothing in the index of his policeman's manual under "invisible dwarfs." Also, it would be quite a problem to snap the handcuffs on even one of the little fellows, much less a whole bunch of them.

Fortunately, Wennmaker didn't panic in the face of this crisis. A cop of experience, he knew just what to do. Sternly, in his most gruff "pull over to the curb" tone of voice, he ordered the one dwarf in the kitchen to leave. Then he went to the basement and told the others to leave. "The dwarfs left," he wrote in his report with a straight face, "without incident." Whereupon the relieved and grateful occupant thanked Wennmaker for his assistance, and our hero continued on his rounds.

Okay, Hollywood. Come up with a story to beat that one!

SENDING FOOD DETERS PRODUCTION EFFORTS

If domestic use of grain had been reduced, much less would have been invested in agricultural research and the production capacity of the major exporting countries would be much lower today than it actually is.

Not only this, says Johnson, but past experience indicates that large-scale food aid contributes relatively little to the food supply of developing countries. Such aid has served as a powerful deterrent by permitting recipient governments to lower the priority that they gave to agricultural research and investment, and farmers were adversely affected by lower prices than would have existed.

Improvement in per capita food consumption in the developing countries will depend primarily upon increasing food production in those countries, says Johnson, and on this score he is "cautiously optimistic" that the people of the developing world will be better fed a decade hence than they are now.

"Agriculture is one of the world's most dynamic activities," he says. "Farmers, even those who are illiterate or who have little education, have demonstrated that when there is a profitable opportunity, they will seize it."

THE STATES MUST PUT UP OR SHUT UP

It is both fortunate and unfortunate that the question of capital punishment should today be so sharply focused on the person of one Gary Mark Gilmore.

It is fortunate because, if we are going to resume executions, of all the hundreds of condemned men occupying death rows, none may so richly deserve death than this man who wantonly and coldbloodedly murdered a motel clerk in Utah (and was charged with but not tried for a second similar murder).

Gilmore is obviously a menace to society. He is also obviously a profoundly disturbed individual, as the flood of stories about his antics have made plain—his demand that he be executed by firing squad, his request to marry the woman who jilted him, their aborted suicide pact.

Gilmore has become a celebrity, and that is what is unfortunate. We hear about Gilmore the psychotic; we forget about Gilmore the murderer.

Even if the board which is to make the final decision early in December gives him what he wants, it is going to be very difficult for the state of Utah to become the first state to execute a prisoner since 1967.

So many people have become so emotionally involved with Gilmore that we can expect a tremendous outpouring of protest. Few of those protesting, however, will be able to tell you the names of his victims.

The fact that Gilmore prefers to die rather than be imprisoned for life, and is apparently determined to find some way to execute himself if the state will not oblige him, is something else that those who oppose capital punishment would just as soon not think about.

But which is more barbaric—a society which imposes the penalty of death upon those who deliberately cause death, or a society which lacks the fortitude to do so, and yet cannot bring itself to abolish capital punishment once and for all?

Gary Gilmore has in effect told the state of Utah, and every other state with capital punishment on its books, to put up or shut up.

SHOCKING

BETTY FORD'S RECORD is pretty good. Her courage in facing breast surgery two years ago is well remembered. She has spoken out openly and frankly on controversial issues such as her daughter's love life, marijuana and abortion.

But it was more than candor that prompted her to leap into the Plains Baptist Church incident. Rev. Clennon King, whose personal history is shady enough to make anyone doubt his motives, set himself up to be turned away from Carter's hometown church. President Ford's wife reacted by saying the church was segregated "and it's obvious that's how he (Carter) feels about the problem of segregation."

Carter has made it clear that's not how he feels about it.

But it certainly shocked anyone who expected better things of Betty Ford. Shocked—and saddened.

Inside Labor
By Victor Riesel

Carter Warned:
Labor prepares confidential agenda for battle with new administration

WASHINGTON— Grandpa (George) Meany, who works in oils, won't sell like Grandma Moses, but the AFL-CIO chief daubs well enough to have 27 of his paintings put on exhibition during the week of Jimmy Carter's inauguration. Neither event will draw crowds from the other. But there's a surrealist symbolism to the competition.

The feud between George Meany and Jimmy Carter is one of the most scintillating conversation pieces in town. Mr. Carter's young legions, who haven't really done their homework, are scoffing at "the old man." They've been walking through a dream sequence. They simply don't realize they're taking on more than a handful of union officials around Meany. In mocking and challenging the 82-year-old labor leader, Carter's clusters are solidifying the movement behind Meany. And that movement, in effect, is America's most powerful political-industrial complex.

It will stonewall Jimmy Carter, President or no President, if he doesn't deliver on his written and oratorical promises to them. He doesn't know it yet, but that's because even such bright political minds as transition leader Jack Watson (who has been wandering around the Rose Garden) believe the White House is more powerful than the House of Labor across Lafayette Park.

Had any of Mr. Carter's capital "clusters" sat in on the AFL-CIO's small eighth floor conference room from 10 a.m. to almost 2 p.m. Monday (Jan. 10) they would have had an instant Washington education. An instant guide to what Congress is all about.

For some four hours the AFL-CIO's National Legislative Action Committee studied the 11-page agenda prepared for it at Meany's direction. Had the Carter tacticians known anything about the movement's operation they'd have chilled. Rarely does Meany submit an agenda.

But this time it was all down on paper -- all the way from the economic blast which the committee hurled at President-elect Carter, to international policy suggestions.

An angry Meany, the veteran of all Washington's veterans, was preparing for battle. Seldom has there been such a political war council. Meany had called in heads of many AFL-CIO departments. Some of them not usually visible men. But powerful men. And the federation's lobbyists and technicians. It was an intense session. Startling to insiders. When it was over they charged an incoming President, their own candidate, with running in "retreat."

And with awarding "tax gifts" to industry. That's what they've said about Jerry Ford.

Later, many commentators said that the honeymoon was over. They are uninformed. The political love-making was over weeks ago. What's happening now appears to be preparation for annulment. Never has George Meany and an official AFL-CIO national committee attacked an incoming President.

Being realists, they know his power. But being pragmatists, they know their own power. For example, they know that Charles Schultze, the new chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, plans to call them in and jawbone them on this year's wage demands. His message will be -- cool it if you don't want official wage-price guidelines. Or, exposure on the witness stand of the Council on Wage and Price Stability. Or perhaps eventually even a wage freeze.

Well, the labor leaders may simply decide to ignore Chairman Schultze. They've walked out on Presidents and White Houe officials before. Many times. And they can do it again.

They can strike for anything they wish. And basically there isn't much the President of the U.S. can do about such walkouts. Get tough, yes. Talk tough, yes. But you can't dig coal with National Guard bayonets. Or run a steel mill.

Now note this: part of labor's agenda calls for a drive to raise the national minimum wage from the current $2.30 an hour to $3. Perhaps with a built-in cost of living formula. President Carter won't go for that. And his Secretary of Labor, Ray Marshall, will have to go up the Hill and testify against such proposals. Labor would then split from the administration and clobber Marshall. This is exactly what happened to former Secretgary of Labor Pete Brennan -- once a powerful Building and Construction union official. Meany ground Brennan into the dust, though some of the latter's aides mockingly said they could crack the "old man" like Humpty Dumpty without a wall.

And there are other ways of unloosing the legislative barrage programmed on that 11-page agenda. Just wait for the AFL-CIO Executive Council midwinter session in Bal Harbour, Fla. Secretary Marshall plans to fly down. And he'd better have a defrosting plan. I've seen Meany freeze cabinet officers in an improvised waiting room while he council calmly deliberated on other matters behind locked doors.

And always, a hundred or so print and TV news people record every bit is this diffident treatment.

President Carter, who then will have been in office just about a month, just about long enough to lose the virginal provincial view of labor, will get the message. So, also, will he when labor's congressional allies begin shoveling up bills costing billions on billions of dollars asking for everything from the creation of a White House-level Office of Maritime Affairs Coordinator to assisting the construction unions as much as he helps to make inner-city jobs for minorities.

Mr. Carter soon will be in the big time. And labor is preparing to give him a hard time unless he stops his "retreat from the goals which we (labor -- VR) understood President-elect Carter to have set during last year's campaign." That's a razor-sharp warning.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Did Unspent Ford Funds Cause Defeat?

by Jack Anderson
and Les Whitten

WASHINGTON — President Ford's campaign aides may have blown the election for him by failing to spend $1.7 million that was available for last-minute TV spots, voter drives and speaking campaigns.

The extra money, a White House aide told us bitterly, would have put the president over the top. Other aides agreed, some of them less certainly, that the incredible miscalculation may have cost him the election. At least in the key state of Ohio, GOP strategists suggested, the money could have made a difference.

The $1.7 million went unspent, ironically, because of the president's determination to keep his campaign free of any Watergate-style financial abuses. At secret meetings in Washington during September, the Ford strategists carefully analyzed the new election law.

It allowed both candidates to spend $21.8 million of their own campaign funds. But the Republicans had come up with another $3.2 million which could be spent, quite legally, by the president's campaign committee.

The money came out of the till of the Republican National Committee. But Ford's campaign chief, Jim Baker, prudently insisted that up to $750,000 should be held back to make sure the president didn't exceed the legal limit.

So the spending rate was kept down. The Ford campaign, meanwhile, began to pick up momentum. As the president gained on Jimmy Carter in the polls, the Republican National Committee urged the campaign committee to loosen the purse strings.

But it was mid-October before the president's campaign aides realized they had been spending money far too slowly. By then, programs to enlist black voters and to step up TV promotion in several key states had already been rejected as too expensive.

Hurried meetings were called, but it was too late to spend the money usefully. On the day after the election, the beaten Ford campaigners began to add up their expenditures. The latest tally shows that Ford could have spent from $1.7 to $1.8 million more than he did.

At the Republican National Committee, a spokesman said bluntly that "we had it available to be spent." The implication was that the president's campaign committee had been too miserly.

A spokesman for the campaign committee acknowledged: "We were disappointed we didn't spend the budgeted amounts. We were conscious of the requirements of the new law and the excesses of the past. We wanted to be damned certain we were within it."

It was pure conjecture, he added, to blame Ford's defeat on the $1.7 million miscalculation.

Suggestion Box: The taxpayers provide their top leaders with chauffeur-driven limousines to get around Washington. The government bigwigs like their limousines to be warm in the winter and cool in the summer. Obliging chauffeurs, therefore, often idle the motors so the limousines will be comfortable when their bosses board them.

A federal employee, writing to the National Suggestion Box, pointed out that both money and gasoline could be saved if the drivers would stop running their motors while they wait. This simple suggestion, he said, would help achieve three government goals: it would conserve gasoline, reduce pollution and save the taxpayers' money.

The suggestion was submitted to all the major federal departments and agencies. Not a single one offered to implement the idea. Only the General Services Administration responded at all, saying it had included the suggestion in a three-page bulletin.

"If you can provide specific information about abuses," responded the GSA, "we will be pleased to pursue them." The agency promised to take "appropriate action" if "the vehicle and the incident can be identified."

The only way this wasteful practice can be stopped, in other words, is for citizens to report the idling limousines. We'll be happy to forward the reports to the GSA. Be sure to specify the date, place and limousine license number.

All communications should be sent to the NATIONAL SUGGESTION BOX, P.O. Box 2009, Washington, D.C. 20013.

Watergate Pardons: President Ford has received a dribble of letters urging a blanket pardon for the Watergate criminals, but he has "given no consideration to executive clemency," a high White House source told us.

None of the Watergate defendants has asked the White House for a pardon. Lawyers for ex-Attorney General John Mitchell considered making an appeal for clemency. But in the end, they decided not even to recommend it to their client. "We felt it would have been useless," a Mitchell attorney told us.

Footnote: As we previously reported and the White House confirmed, Nixon's ousted vice president, Spiro Agnew, sounded out the White House about a pardon through his attorney. Newspaper stories about the Agnew pardon, incidentally, implied that we had fouled up the details. The stories indicated we had reported incorrectly that Agnew's attorney called presidential counsel Philip Buchen. In fact, we accurately reported the call had been made to Buchen's office, not to Buchen himself.

The commission members were in such awe of the late FBI director, J. Edgar Hoover, that they never dared ask for the files, but depended upon what the FBI wished to provide, inside sources say.

The special House committee which is now investigating the assassination will belatedly request the full FBI files.

Longet trial draws to close

ASPEN, Colo. (AP) — It took a week to find 12 citizens of this swinging ski town who didn't already think she was guilty. Now, after four days of testimony, they must decide whether Claudine Longet was reckless or just the victim of an accident when her lover died.

The French-born entertain-'s manslaughter trial was to go to the jury today following lawyers' closing arguments and instructions from state District Court Judge George E. Lohr.

Both sides rested Thursday after testimony on why a gun went off in Miss Longet's hands, killing champion skier Vladimir "Spider" Sabich, 31, in the bathroom of his $250,000 mountain home last March.

Miss Longet's former husband, singer Andy Williams, greeted her with a kiss during a short court recess. Actor Jack Nicholson, who said he "just wanted to see the trial," sat in on the day's proceedings.

Defense and prosecution spent almost four hours in the judge's chambers debating instructions for the jury in its deliberations.

"This is a case involving some difficult concepts of negligence, recklessness," defense attorney Charles V. Weedman said.

Earlier, the prosecution cross-examined Sabich's best friend in an effort to prove that Miss Longet, 35, "likes to take chances."

James Lillstrom, an advertising executive from Boulder, said the affair between Sabich and Miss Longet began in 1972 after a glass-tossing incident in a bar.

Ann Landers

Tasters are friendly folks

Dear Ann Landers: Will you tell me, please, what is the matter with an adult who simply MUST have a taste of whatever is on someone else's plate? Both my husband nad his brother are like this and it annoys me terribly. Thanks for any insights you might have on this revolting habit. -- F.L. Of Wellington, Kansas

Dear F.L.: That "revolting habit" is a hangover from childhood when kids used to say, "Gimme a taste." I am especially interested in such people because I am one mysèlf.

I learned that adults who must taste what is on the plates of others are usually generous, inquisitive and up-front about their feelings. I also learned it is a sign of affection to ask for a taste.

A person who does NOT feel friendly will not ask. Conversely, the individual who resents giving a taste does not feel friendly toward the person who asks. Sharing is what friendship and love are all about. (P.S. I probably told you more than you wanted to know and I'm sorry about that.)

Dear Ann Landers: Usually your advice is right on target but your comments on breast reduction surgery were a wee bit off. It IS expensive, as you said. But painful -- no.

I had the operation 18 months ago and experienced very little discomfort. Within 30 days I was back on the tennis court feeling like a million dollars.

And there were side benefits I didn't expect. Getting rid of those pendulous breasts gave me the impetus to go on a diet. (For years I felt like a cow and I ate like one.)

The best news is that my insurance policy covered all costs. I was able to prove I needed the surgery to eliminate back and shoulder pains. It was not simply a "cosmetic" procedure.

Please, Ann, recommend this operation for any woman who has the problem. My 65-year-old mother had hers done six weeks after I did mine. She now says it's the best thing that ever happened to her. -- Sweater Girl -- Age 42

Dear Sweater Girl: It's not possible to measure pain. Some individuals can tolerate a great deal -- others, very little. You, obviously, are a very stoic lady.

Most women say the operation IS painful but they agree it is well worth the discomfort. Thanks for the testimonial.

Dear Ann Landers: Tonight five of us girls who work in the same building had dinner together at a good restaurant. (Dutch treat.) The food was excellent and so was the service.

When it came time to pay our checks, I started to figure out what to leave the waitress.

One of the group (well-traveled and sophisticated) insisted that since we were all women it wasn't proper to leave a tip. Two of us felt she was wrong. The other two didn't know for sure but were inclined to side with "Miss Well-Traveled."

May we have the final word from you? -- Stumped

Dear Stumped: The waitress who served you didn't work less hard because you were female. Women should tip for services as well as men.

Don't get burned by a "line" that's too hot to handle. Play it cool with Ann Landers's guide to "Necking and Petting -- What Are the Limits?" Send your request to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 1400, Elgin, Ill. 60120, enclosing 50 cents in coin and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

FDA to test all additives on market to check safety

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration announced today that beginning in March it will periodically test all food additives already on the market to "to make sure they are safe by modern standards."

Under the program, all preservatives, colors, flavors and substances that may get into food from packaging will undergo regular scientific re-evaluation, acting FDA commissioner Sherwin Gardner told a Senate committee.

The committee's chairman, Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., has criticized FDA for allowing chemical food additives to remain on the market long after questions have been raised about their safety.

Gardner told the committee, "Science is dynamic and a food additive judged safe by the science of 1970 may very well be suspect by the science of 1977."

Gardner said if the re-evaluation indicates that an additive is unsafe it will be restricted or removed from the market.

"Under this program, we will periodically recheck our past ... decisions about food additives against the latest scientific information and methods," Gardner said. He said the re-evaluation will start in March when a team of FDA scientists will begin to develop a priority list for the 2,100 substances added directly to foods.

Poor diets a major U.S. health problem

WASHINGTON (AP) — Poor diets are one of the leading public health problems, a Senate committee report said today. It recommended a major new federal program to educate Americans on what they should eat.

"The public is confused about what to eat to maximize health," Chairman George McGovern, D-S.D., of the Senate nutrition committee said in the report entitled "Dietary Goals for the United States."

The report said changes in the average diet in the United States since the beginning of the century "may be as profoundly damaging to the nation's health as the widespread contagious diseases of the early part of this century."

"The over-consumption of fat, generally, and saturated fat in particular, as well as cholesterol, sugar, salt and alcohol have been related to six of the ten leading causes of death: heart disease, cancer, cerebrovascular disease, diabetes, arteriosclerosis and cirrhosis of the liver," it said.

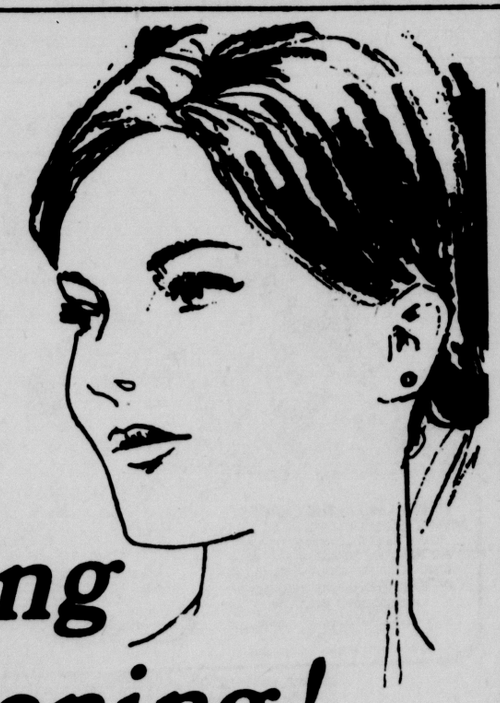

Over-consumption in general is a major problem but undernourishment due to dietary patterns may also lead to malnutrition, the report prepared by the committee staff said.

In its suggestions to consumers, the report recommended increasing consumption of fruits, vegetables, whole grains, poultry and fish. It recommended decreasing consumption of meat, foods high in fat, eggs and other high cholesterol sources, sugar and salt.

Both sides rested Thursday after testimony on why a gun went off in Miss Longet's hands, killing champion skier Vladimir "Spider" Sabich, 31, in the bathroom of his $250,000 mountain home last March.

Miss Longet's former husband, singer Andy Williams, greeted her with a kiss during a short court recess. Actor Jack Nicholson, who said he "just wanted to see the trial," sat in on the day's proceedings.

Defense and prosecution spent almost four hours in the judge's chambers debating instructions for the jury in its deliberations.

Earlier, the prosecution cross-examined Sabich's best friend in an effort to prove that Miss Longet, 35, "likes to take chances."

James Lillstrom, an advertising executive from Boulder, said the affair between Sabich and Miss Longet began in 1972 after a glass-tossing incident in a bar.

FDA to test all additives on market to check safety

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration announced today that beginning in March it will periodically test all food additives already on the market to "to make sure they are safe by modern standards."

Under the program, all preservatives, colors, flavors and substances that may get into food from packaging will undergo regular scientific re-evaluation, acting FDA commissioner Sherwin Gardner told a Senate committee.

The committee's chairman, Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., has criticized FDA for allowing chemical food additives to remain on the market long after questions have been raised about their safety.

Gardner told the committee, "Science is dynamic and a food additive judged safe by the science of 1970 may very well be suspect by the science of 1977."

Gardner said if the re-evaluation indicates that an additive is unsafe it will be restricted or removed from the market.

"Under this program, we will periodically recheck our past ... decisions about food additives against the latest scientific information and methods," Gardner said. He said the re-evaluation will start in March when a team of FDA scientists will begin to develop a priority list for the 2,100 substances added directly to foods.

Poor diets a major U.S. health problem

WASHINGTON (AP) — Poor diets are one of the leading public health problems, a Senate committee report said today. It recommended a major new federal program to educate Americans on what they should eat.

"The public is confused about what to eat to maximize health," Chairman George McGovern, D-S.D., of the Senate nutrition committee said in the report entitled "Dietary Goals for the United States."

The report said changes in the average diet in the United States since the beginning of the century "may be as profoundly damaging to the nation's health as the widespread contagious diseases of the early part of this century."

"The over-consumption of fat, generally, and saturated fat in particular, as well as cholesterol, sugar, salt and alcohol have been related to six of the ten leading causes of death: heart disease, cancer, cerebrovascular disease, diabetes, arteriosclerosis and cirrhosis of the liver," it said.

Over-consumption in general is a major problem but undernourishment due to dietary patterns may also lead to malnutrition, the report prepared by the committee staff said.

In its suggestions to consumers, the report recommended increasing consumption of fruits, vegetables, whole grains, poultry and fish. It recommended decreasing consumption of meat, foods high in fat, eggs and other high cholesterol sources, sugar and salt.

Ann Landers

Tasters are friendly folks

Dear Ann Landers: Will you tell me, please, what is the matter with an adult who simply MUST have a taste of whatever is on someone else's plate? Both my husband nad his brother are like this and it annoys me terribly. Thanks for any insights you might have on this revolting habit. -- F.L. Of Wellington, Kansas

Dear F.L.: That "revolting habit" is a hangover from childhood when kids used to say, "Gimme a taste." I am especially interested in such people because I am one myself.

I learned that adults who must taste what is on the plates of others are usually generous, inquisitive and up-front about their feelings. I also learned it is a sign of affection to ask for a taste.

A person who does NOT feel friendly will not ask. Conversely, the individual who resents giving a taste does not feel friendly toward the person who asks. Sharing is what friendship and love are all about. (P.S. I probably told you more than you wanted to know and I'm sorry about that.)

Dear Ann Landers: Usually your advice is right on target but your comments on breast reduction surgery were a wee bit off. It IS expensive, as you said. But painful -- no.

I had the operation 18 months ago and experienced very little discomfort. Within 30 days I was back on the tennis court feeling like a million dollars.

And there were side benefits I didn't expect. Getting rid of those pendulous breasts gave me the impetus to go on a diet. (For years I felt like a cow and I ate like one.)

The best news is that my insurance policy covered all costs. I was able to prove I needed the surgery to eliminate back and shoulder pains. It was not simply a "cosmetic" procedure.

Please, Ann, recommend this operation for any woman who has the problem. My 65-year-old mother had hers done six weeks after I did mine. She now says it's the best thing that ever happened to her. -- Sweater Girl -- Age 42

Dear Sweater Girl: It's not possible to measure pain. Some individuals can tolerate a great deal -- others, very little. You, obviously, are a very stoic lady.

Most women say the operation IS painful but they agree it is well worth the discomfort. Thanks for the testimonial.

Dear Ann Landers: Tonight five of us girls who work in the same building had dinner together at a good restaurant. (Dutch treat.) The food was excellent and so was the service.

When it came time to pay our checks, I started to figure out what to leave the waitress.

One of the group (well-traveled and sophisticated) insisted that since we were all women it wasn't proper to leave a tip. Two of us felt she was wrong. The other two didn't know for sure but were inclined to side with "Miss Well-Traveled."

May we have the final word from you? -- Stumped

Dear Stumped: The waitress who served you didn't work less hard because you were female. Women should tip for services as well as men.

Don't get burned by a "line" that's too hot to handle. Play it cool with Ann Landers's guide to "Necking and Petting -- What Are the Limits?" Send your request to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 1400, Elgin, Ill. 60120, enclosing 50 cents in coin and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Bulldogs and Bluejays clash tonight

BULLETIN

..The Charleston - Sikeston basketball game scheduled for tonight at Charleston has been temporarily postponed and rescheduled for Saturday night, Charleston coach and athletic director Mitch Haskins announced at 11:30 Fiday morning. Officials from both schools will decide Saturday if the game can be played Saturday night.

Weather permitting, the Charleston High School gymnasium will tonight be the site of a spectacle which usually ranks along with graduation as the high point of the school term for each of the competing schools.

It is the Charleston-Sikeston basketball game, and the fact that both teams are in the thick of the battle for the SeMo Basketball Conference championship makes little difference. The bleachers at the CHS gymnasium would be packed even if neither team had won a game all year.

The Bluejays, ranked number one in the Daily Standard coaches poll and number one in Class 3-A in the Missouri Sportswriters and Sportscasters Association poll, and undefeated at 13-0. Charleston coach Mitch Haskins admits that if his team loses a game before the Class 3-A Regional, it will probably be against Sikeston. "I hate to lose a conference game, but I can't really see anybody out of the conference beating us," he said, pointing out that surging Kennett and Cape Central were still on the CHS schedule. "But it certainly wouldn't be a disgrace to lose to Sikeston."

The 8-2 Bulldogs would like to be just the team to knock off the Jays. Charleston won a 46-33 decision over the Dogs in the finals of the Sikeston Invitational Tournament early in December, and Bulldog coach Buddy Spears says that his team will have to do a lot of things differently this time around. "For one thing, we're gonna have to make less turnovers," Spears said, recalling that his team had several bounce passes picked off in the first battle by the lightning quick Charleston five. "And we're gonna have to have more outside shooting this time, too."

In the initial Bulldog-Bluejay encounter, Sikeston played extremely cautiously, to the point of passing up open shots from the guard positions, and Spears no doubt had this in mind when referring to the need of some scoring punch from backcourtmen Larry Jackson and Jeff Limbaugh tonight. Both seniors have the touch to score when left open, and although big men Paul Gilbow, Alonzo Harris and Tim Ward are doing the bulk of the offensive work for the Bulldogs as of late, Spears said he expects his guards to open things up tonight.

And while he admits it would be a mistake to try to get into a shooting match with the talented Jays, Spears predicted a slightly more wide open game from his team tonight. "If we've got a break, we'll take it, but if we don't, we'll slow it down."

Haskins said he thinks the key to tonight's game for his team will be staying on the boards with Sikeston's 6-6, 6-3, 6-3 frontline. "We've got to keep Gilbow and Harris from getting those second and third shots."

Charleston will be weakened in the rebounding department by the absence of high-leaping forward Percy Owens, who underwent surgery for appendicitis Wednesday and will not be in uniform for tonight's ballgame. Although Owens has been bumped from his spot in the starting lineup this year by the hard-working Wilbert McCain and has seen limited action lately, Haskins says that Owens will be sorely missed by the Bluejays during his recuperation, especially tonight. "Percy's made a big contribution every time he's played against Sikeston," Haskins proclaimed, adding that his frontline depth would be diminished without Owens.

As of mid-morning, the status of tonight's game was in doubt, due to poor driving and parking conditions around the CHS campus. A mid-morning meeting was to decide the fate of tonight's game.

Decision in Finley-Kuhn lawsuit may not come for two months

CHICAGO (AP) — Hearings in Charles O. Finley's $3.5 million suit against baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn have ended, but Judge Frank McGarr of U.S. District Court is not expected to hand down a decision for about two months.

The 15-day trial ended Thursday with conclusion of cross-examination of Kuhn. McGarr gave attorneys for both sides 45 days to file final briefs on or before Feb. 28.

Last June 15, Finley sold three players — outfielder Joe Rudi and pitcher Rollie Fingers to the Boston Red Sox for $1 million each and pitcher Vida Blue to the New York Yankees for $1.5 million.

Kuhn voided the sales on the grounds they were not in the best interests of baseball and Finley followed with his suit claiming the sales were none of the commissioner's business.

The defense has argued that the commissioner's powers in baseball are absolute and all-encompassing and that Finley's sales were disruptive to the competitive balance of baseball. Finley's lawyers insist that the deals broke no rules, were within the laws of baseball and were not unlike previous sales in the game.

McGarr repeatedly has said that the issue before him is whether Kuhn had the authority to void the sales. McGarr also dismissed the Red Sox and Yankees from the suit, saying it was "clearly a matter between Finley and Kuhn."

Kuhn admitted that none of the teams in baseball called him to complain about the coopetitive balance in the game, although there were such "indications in a conference call" he held the day after the deals and "Mr. (Bud) Selig (Milwaukee owner) complained about competition in his division, the American League East, which eventually was won by the Yankees."

Miller having putting problems

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Johnny Miller has the putting miseries.

Miller, who had won the last three times out here, struggled to a two-over-par 74 Thursday that left him seven strokes back of Tom Watson and four others who shared the lead at 67 in the uncompleted first round of the $200,000 Joe Garagiola-Tucson Open Golf Tournament.

"I'm finding out this course is a lot tougher than I thought it was," Miller said of the 7,305-yard Tucson National Golf Club course, which he blistered with a 25-under-par winning total two years ago.

"I guess I'm just starting off the way you're supposed to start the season. I'm kind of uncertain, unsure of my game. That's the way you're supposed to be at the start of the season, isn't it?"

It's the slowest start he's had in four seasons. He won his first two starts in 1975, his first three starts in 1974 and two of his first four in 1976. He hasn't given up here, but he's already looking forward to next week's Bing Crosby.

&'I'm not out of it," he said. "I'm not hitting the ball perfect, but I'm hitting it good enough to win. It's just my putting. It's horrendous. I missed three-footers on my second and third holes and that just took it out of me. I'll be okay if I can just get some putts to drop."

The start of the day's play was delayed more than one-half hour by frost and frozen greens and 27 players were stranded on the course by darkness. They were scheduled to complete their rounds Friday morning.

None of them appeared in position to challenge for the lead.

Craig Stadler was alone with a 68, four under par and just one stroke out of the lead, with Jim Dent, Tommy Aaron, Joe Inman, Jerry McGee and Rik Massengale grouped at 69.

Miller wasn't alone in his problems with the course that ranks as the longest the touring pros encounter all season. Ben Crenshaw and U.S. Open champ Jerry Pate, a winner last week in Phoenix, had 74s. Masters titleholder Ray Floyd had a 73. PGA champ Dave Stockton scrambled to a 71.

Second IN COMMAND

Daily Standard Sportswriter

How Cum Dept:

How cum I get all the "nut" letters? Seems some fella in Kennett thinks you have to be a qualified official and have a degree in coaching to evaluate high school sports, specifically which team is well-coached, etc. Well, we don't propose to decide which of this district's teams are well coached and we try not to be too critical of referee's judgement calls. The article that precipitated the temper tantrum by our Kennett "fan" appeared in the January 5, 1977, Daily Standard and was simply a statement of editorial policy, pledging a full attempt at honesty in reporting and decrying those who think that officials are above reproach. Nice to know you have fans, though! (And we will try to avoid honesty, at all costs, in the future.

As an afterthought, I don't think we were complimentary enough about the reserves in the last Bulldog story, especially Mike Warfield. Mike did get his name in part of the headline, but he wasn't given the full credit for sparking the Bulldog offense in a 39-point second half. Sikeston scored only 23 points in the first half.

Mike's quickness, jumping and passing abilities came in very handy during the contest, and it was his pair of clutch free throws that sealed the victory. If he would improve his shot selection, the Bulldogs' senior guard could win a lot of games for Sikeston coming off the bench.

Another reserve, senior guard David Shell, was effective off the bench in the first half. One of the district's finest all-around athletes, David nailed a 16-footer for the Bulldogs' only outside bucket in the first half.

And, reserve forward Kenny Standridge got the most important offensive rebound of the game, stuffing in the team's 58th point. Although Notre Dame tied the score once after that, they never recovered to go ahead.

We were intrigued to note that new Cardinal manager Vern Rapp plans to use a dress code in the season upcoming, banning all mustaches, beards and long hair. Happy New Year, Mad Hungarian!

By the way, you are urged to attend the Cardinal Caravan at the Elks Club next Tuesday afternoon at 1 p.m. It will give me a chance to ask slugger Ted Simmons why he hit only five homeruns in 1976 after combining for 38 in the two previous years. That cost me ten dollars. You see, I had a bet with Stan Hall . . . forget it. It hurts too much to remember.

Right now I'd like to go on record as supporting Charlie Francis' proposal that Semo will be well represented at Columbia next March. I'd hate to try to pick which three, in 1-A through 3-A, though. I do think that the best coach in Southeast Missouri is . . . oh yeah, I'm not qualified to do that anymore. Amazing how quickly I've turned into a dummy again.

I don't think its necessary to urge everyone to attend tonight's game at Charleston, if it's played. Anytime those two meet, a packed house is guaranteed. I will urge you to go early, if you intend to sit down.

And, wish the Bulldogs GOOD LUCK!

Bulldogs and Bluejays clash tonight

BULLETIN

..The Charleston - Sikeston basketball game scheduled for tonight at Charleston has been temporarily postponed and rescheduled for Saturday night, Charleston coach and athletic director Mitch Haskins announced at 11:30 Fiday morning. Officials from both schools will decide Saturday if the game can be played Saturday night.

Weather permitting, the Charleston High School gymnasium will tonight be the site of a spectacle which usually ranks along with graduation as the high point of the school term for each of the competing schools.

It is the Charleston-Sikeston basketball game, and the fact that both teams are in the thick of the battle for the SeMo Basketball Conference championship makes little difference. The bleachers at the CHS gymnasium would be packed even if neither team had won a game all year.

The Bluejays, ranked number one in the Daily Standard coaches poll and number one in Class 3-A in the Missouri Sportswriters and Sportscasters Association poll, and undefeated at 13-0. Charleston coach Mitch Haskins admits that if his team loses a game before the Class 3-A Regional, it will probably be against Sikeston. "I hate to lose a conference game, but I can't really see anybody out of the conference beating us," he said, pointing out that surging Kennett and Cape Central were still on the CHS schedule. "But it certainly wouldn't be a disgrace to lose to Sikeston."

The 8-2 Bulldogs would like to be just the team to knock off the Jays. Charleston won a 46-33 decision over the Dogs in the finals of the Sikeston Invitational Tournament early in December, and Bulldog coach Buddy Spears says that his team will have to do a lot of things differently this time around. "For one thing, we're gonna have to make less turnovers," Spears said, recalling that his team had several bounce passes picked off in the first battle by the lightning quick Charleston five. "And we're gonna have to have more outside shooting this time, too."

In the initial Bulldog-Bluejay encounter, Sikeston played extremely cautiously, to the point of passing up open shots from the guard positions, and Spears no doubt had this in mind when referring to the need of some scoring punch from backcourtmen Larry Jackson and Jeff Limbaugh tonight. Both seniors have the touch to score when left open, and although big men Paul Gilbow, Alonzo Harris and Tim Ward are doing the bulk of the offensive work for the Bulldogs as of late, Spears said he expects his guards to open things up tonight.

And while he admits it would be a mistake to try to get into a shooting match with the talented Jays, Spears predicted a slightly more wide open game from his team tonight. "If we've got a break, we'll take it, but if we don't, we'll slow it down."

Haskins said he thinks the key to tonight's game for his team will be staying on the boards with Sikeston's 6-6, 6-3, 6-3 frontline. "We've got to keep Gilbow and Harris from getting those second and third shots."

Charleston will be weakened in the rebounding department by the absence of high-leaping forward Percy Owens, who underwent surgery for appendicitis Wednesday and will not be in uniform for tonight's ballgame. Although Owens has been bumped from his spot in the starting lineup this year by the hard-working Wilbert McCain and has seen limited action lately, Haskins says that Owens will be sorely missed by the Bluejays during his recuperation, especially tonight. "Percy's made a big contribution every time he's played against Sikeston," Haskins proclaimed, adding that his frontline depth would be diminished without Owens.

As of mid-morning, the status of tonight's game was in doubt, due to poor driving and parking conditions around the CHS campus. A mid-morning meeting was to decide the fate of tonight's game.

Decision in Finley-Kuhn lawsuit may not come for two months

CHICAGO (AP) — Hearings in Charles O. Finley's $3.5 million suit against baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn have ended, but Judge Frank McGarr of U.S. District Court is not expected to hand down a decision for about two months.

The 15-day trial ended Thursday with conclusion of cross-examination of Kuhn. McGarr gave attorneys for both sides 45 days to file final briefs on or before Feb. 28.

Last June 15, Finley sold three players — outfielder Joe Rudi and pitcher Rollie Fingers to the Boston Red Sox for $1 million each and pitcher Vida Blue to the New York Yankees for $1.5 million.

Kuhn voided the sales on the grounds they were not in the best interests of baseball and Finley followed with his suit claiming the sales were none of the commissioner's business.

The defense has argued that the commissioner's powers in baseball are absolute and all-encompassing and that Finley's sales were disruptive to the competitive balance of baseball. Finley's lawyers insist that the deals broke no rules, were within the laws of baseball and were not unlike previous sales in the game.

McGarr repeatedly has said that the issue before him is whether Kuhn had the authority to void the sales. McGarr also dismissed the Red Sox and Yankees from the suit, saying it was "clearly a matter between Finley and Kuhn."

Kuhn admitted that none of the teams in baseball called him to complain about the coopetitive balance in the game, although there were such "indications in a conference call" he held the day after the deals and "Mr. (Bud) Selig (Milwaukee owner) complained about competition in his division, the American League East, which eventually was won by the Yankees."

Miller having putting problems

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Johnny Miller has the putting miseries.

Miller, who had won the last three times out here, struggled to a two-over-par 74 Thursday that left him seven strokes back of Tom Watson and four others who shared the lead at 67 in the uncompleted first round of the $200,000 Joe Garagiola-Tucson Open Golf Tournament.

Sharing the top spot with Watson were nonwinners Andy North, Alan Tapie, Gary McCord and Dr. Gil Morgan.

"I'm finding out this course is a lot tougher than I thought it was," Miller said of the 7,305-yard Tucson National Golf Club course, which he blistered with a 25-under-par winning total two years ago.

"I guess I'm just starting off the way you're supposed to start the season. I'm kind of uncertain, unsure of my game. That's the way you're supposed to be at the start of the season, isn't it?"

It's the slowest start he's had in four seasons. He won his first two starts in 1975, his first three starts in 1974 and two of his first four in 1976. He hasn't given up here, but he's already looking forward to next week's Bing Crosby.

&'I'm not out of it," he said. "I'm not hitting the ball perfect, but I'm hitting it good enough to win. It's just my putting. It's horrendous. I missed three-footers on my second and third holes and that just took it out of me. I'll be okay if I can just get some putts to drop."

The start of the day's play was delayed more than one-half hour by frost and frozen greens and 27 players were stranded on the course by darkness. They were scheduled to complete their rounds Friday morning.

None of them appeared in position to challenge for the lead.

Craig Stadler was alone with a 68, four under par and just one stroke out of the lead, with Jim Dent, Tommy Aaron, Joe Inman, Jerry McGee and Rik Massengale grouped at 69.

Miller wasn't alone in his problems with the course that ranks as the longest the touring pros encounter all season. Ben Crenshaw and U.S. Open champ Jerry Pate, a winner last week in Phoenix, had 74s. Masters titleholder Ray Floyd had a 73. PGA champ Dave Stockton scrambled to a 71.

Daily Standard Sportswriter

How Cum Dept:

How cum I get all the "nut" letters? Seems some fella in Kennett thinks you have to be a qualified official and have a degree in coaching to evaluate high school sports, specifically which team is well-coached, etc. Well, we don't propose to decide which of this district's teams are well coached and we try not to be too critical of referee's judgement calls. The article that precipitated the temper tantrum by our Kennett "fan" appeared in the January 5, 1977, Daily Standard and was simply a statement of editorial policy, pledging a full attempt at honesty in reporting and decrying those who think that officials are above reproach. Nice to know you have fans, though! (And we will try to avoid honesty, at all costs, in the future.

As an afterthought, I don't think we were complimentary enough about the reserves in the last Bulldog story, especially Mike Warfield. Mike did get his name in part of the headline, but he wasn't given the full credit for sparking the Bulldog offense in a 39-point second half. Sikeston scored only 23 points in the first half.

Mike's quickness, jumping and passing abilities came in very handy during the contest, and it was his pair of clutch free throws that sealed the victory. If he would improve his shot selection, the Bulldogs' senior guard could win a lot of games for Sikeston coming off the bench.

Another reserve, senior guard David Shell, was effective off the bench in the first half. One of the district's finest all-around athletes, David nailed a 16-footer for the Bulldogs' only outside bucket in the first half.

And, reserve forward Kenny Standridge got the most important offensive rebound of the game, stuffing in the team's 58th point. Although Notre Dame tied the score once after that, they never recovered to go ahead.

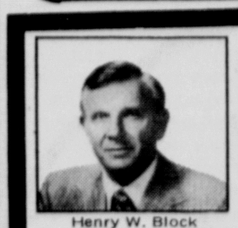

We were intrigued to note that new Cardinal manager Vern Rapp plans to use a dress code in the season upcoming, banning all mustaches, beards and long hair. Happy New Year, Mad Hungarian!

By the way, you are urged to attend the Cardinal Caravan at the Elks Club next Tuesday afternoon at 1 p.m. It will give me a chance to ask slugger Ted Simmons why he hit only five homeruns in 1976 after combining for 38 in the two previous years. That cost me ten dollars. You see, I had a bet with Stan Hall . . . forget it. It hurts too much to remember.

Right now I'd like to go on record as supporting Charlie Francis' proposal that Semo will be well represented at Columbia next March. I'd hate to try to pick which three, in 1-A through 3-A, though. I do think that the best coach in Southeast Missouri is . . . oh yeah, I'm not qualified to do that anymore. Amazing how quickly I've turned into a dummy again.

I don't think its necessary to urge everyone to attend tonight's game at Charleston, if it's played. Anytime those two meet, a packed house is guaranteed. I will urge you to go early, if you intend to sit down.

And, wish the Bulldogs GOOD LUCK!

Tarkenton blasted by his Pro Bowl teammates

SAN DIEGO (AP) — They're saying some pretty nasty things about Fran Tarkenton at the Pro Bowl, mainly because he's not a part of it.

"His not being here is like a slap in the face to every player taking 0art in this game," St. Louis Cardinals quarterback Jim Hart said at Thursday's workout.

Hart is closer to the situation than anyone else. He would not be a part of it, if Tarkenton, the quarterback of the Minnesota Vikings, had not decided to skip Monday night's game in Seattle.

Tarkenton claims an injury suffered about four weeks ago in the opening round of the National Football League playoffs is forcing him out of this annual all-star game — though he never reported any after-effects from that game when he played in the National Conference championships and in the Super Bowl.

"It's not the first time he's pulled this," Hart said of Tarkenton's withdrawal. "Personally, I couldn't be happier. It gives me a chance to play in a game that only a few players get a chance to play in. I'm absolutley delighted to be here. Listen, it's more than just another game. It's an honor."

Tarkenton, it must be noted, is not the only Pro Bowl selection pulling out of this meeting of American and National Conference stars. Five others have done the same — but that hasn't stilled the criticism of Tarkenton.

"If a guy's chosen to play in a game like this," said Hart, "he should have the decency to be a part of it. It's not asking too much."

Tarkenton has now been selected to four Pro Bowls. But he has appeared in only one, in 1971. This makes the third straight year he is by-passing this game, which follows the Super Bowl by one week.

"His excuses are wearing a little thin, don't you think?" said Roger Staubach of Dallas, elevated to the NFC starting quarterback job by Tarkenton's absence. "I think what he's doi g is disgraceful."

Even one of Tarkenton's teammates, rookie wide receiver Sammy White, was critical of his quarterback.

"If it was really a bad injury that was keeping him out, like Franco (Harris of the Pittsburgh Steelers), I could see it," White said. "But from what's being said, I just don't know.

Will Grimsley's Sports World

NEW YORK (AP) — "In all his life, Joe Namath has never been a loser," said the man in the plaid jacket. "He is a proud person. He would like to exit from football on a winning note."

James Walsh, Park Avenue attorney, University of Alabama graduate, manager of one of sport's hottest commercial properties, knows better than anyone else what makes Broadway Joe — even on gimpy legs — run.

It is fierce pride. It is also an almost passionate love for the game. Namath may be 25 per cent actor, 30 per cent TV huckster, 20 per cent lady killer. He is 100 proof football.

"I am sure Joe is sincere when he says he would like to play at least another year — and with the Los Angeles Rams," Walsh said, picking delicately at a piece of broiled flounder in a Manhattan restaurant.

"Because of his various injuries and because of the decline of the Jets, he has been a tarnished hero since 1973. He still feels that he can hold his own with any quarterback in football. He would welcome another chance to prove it."

That undoubtedly was the reason that Joe tossed out the bait a week ago prior to the Super Bowl, saying if he continued football it would have to be with the Los Angeles Rams — not the New York Jets.

Reaction was spontaneous. "Who wants him? — he's all washed up," said the severer critics. "If Joe had been with Los Angeles this year, the Rams would have won the National Conference and probably the Super Bowl," countered supporters.

Both the Rams and Jets are playing it cool. Namath remains an expensive piece of gridiron bric-a-brac — at $450,000 the highest paid performer in the game — still to be placed on the bargaining block.

It could be a marriage consummated in football heaven. The Rams are a rough, tough team of tremendous talent and physical strength obviously in need of quarterback guidance. Namath is a field general who, despite a long history of tissue paper knees, is conceded to have the sharpest mind and deadliest passing arm in the game.

If the Rams and Jets let sane judgment prevail over back room wheeling and dealing, the ingredients are present to benefit both parties.

Why not an even trade — the Jets giving up Namath to the Rams fo the disenchanted Ron Jaworski? Quarterback for quarterback, even-steven.

Jaworski has played out his option with the Rams and disclosed he prefers to play elsewhere. Namath has said he is ready and willing to relieve the Jets of their $450,000 option on a third year of his dying contract.

The deadline is May 1. If the Jets don't sign or trade him by that date, Namath would become a free agent. Then he could offer his services to anyone, including the Rams, and name his price.

Joe's price may not be as staggering as one might imagine. He is not, contrary to impressions, dependent on the football limelight to maintain his outside sources of income. Who knows? For one last hurrah, he might cut his $450,000 price tag sharply. He might even agree to second fiddle or backup status.

Tarkenton blasted by his Pro Bowl teammates

"His not being here is like a slap in the face to every player taking 0art in this game," St. Louis Cardinals quarterback Jim Hart said at Thursday's workout.

Hart is closer to the situation than anyone else. He would not be a part of it, if Tarkenton, the quarterback of the Minnesota Vikings, had not decided to skip Monday night's game in Seattle.

Tarkenton claims an injury suffered about four weeks ago in the opening round of the National Football League playoffs is forcing him out of this annual all-star game — though he never reported any after effects from that game when he played in the National Conference championships and in the Super Bowl.

"It's not the first time he's pulled this," Hart said of Tarkenton's withdrawal. "Personally, I couldn't be happier. It gives me a chance to play in a game that only a few players get a chance to play in. I'm absolutley delighted to be here. Listen, it's more than just another game. It's an honor."

Tarkenton, it must be noted, is not the only Pro Bowl selection pulling out of this meeting of American and National Conference stars. Five others have done the same — but that hasn't stilled the criticism of Tarkenton.

"If a guy's chosen to play in a game like this," said Hart, "he should have the decency to be a part of it. It's not asking too much."

Tarkenton has now been selected to four Pro Bowls. But he has appeared in only one, in 1971. This makes the third straight year he is by-passing this game, which follows the Super Bowl by one week.

"His excuses are wearing a little thin, don't you think?" said Roger Staubach of Dallas, elevated to the NFC starting quarterback job by Tarkenton's absence. "I think what he's doi g is disgraceful."

Even one of Tarkenton's teammates, rookie wide receiver Sammy White, was critical of his quarterback.

"If it was really a bad injury that was keeping him out, like Franco (Harris of the Pittsburgh Steelers), I could see it," White said. "But from what's being said, I just don't know.

"This is my first game, so I'm all excited about it. Maybe if I'd been picked for a lot of them, I'd feel different — but I hope not. I mean, the fans are paying to see the best players in the game. That's what they deserve. That's what they should be seeing."

NEW YORK (AP) — "In all his life, Joe Namath has never been a loser," said the man in the plaid jacket. "He is a proud person. He would like to exit from football on a winning note."

Witnesses to convene

KENNETT — Approximately 1,500 delegates from southeast Missouri and northeast Arkansas are expected in Kennett Jan. 22 and 23 for the semi-annual circuit convention of Jehovah's Witnesses at the American Legion Community Building.

Sponsored by the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, the convention will have the theme, "Rendering Sacred Service With Your Power of Reason," drawn from Romans 12:1 and 2 in the Bible.

Highlight of the weekend assembly will be the address, "Keep Seeking God's Kingdom," delivered by Gerald D. Grizzle, a traveling representative of the Watchtower Society.

A number of local men will help staff the 16 departments that have been organized to operate the two-day conclave, according to Cleo Cunningham, presiding overseer of the Kennett Witnesses.

Don Davidson of Kennett will help manage a special food service department to provide refreshments for the delegates while the convention is in session. Davidson said, however, many delegates will take evening meals in local restaurants since there are no evening sessions planned.

Don Nagel and Marvin Thompson of Kennett will operate the convention's rooming Department, Cunningham said, adding that delegates will be placed in motels with a 20-mile radius of Kennett.

Other area men who will staff the convention are William Butler of Hayti, information, lost and found department; Finis Archer of Hayti, literature, magazines and territory department; Douglas Wight of Steele, sound department; and Steve Oliver of Piggott, Ark., volunteer service department.

The convention will be open to the public and all seats are free.

The Prayer

"Unless the Lord builds the house, those who build it labor in vain." (Psalm 127:1 RSV)

PRAYER: Father, fill our earthly homes with the same spirit of love that permeats Your eternal kingdom. In Your Son's name we pray. Amen.

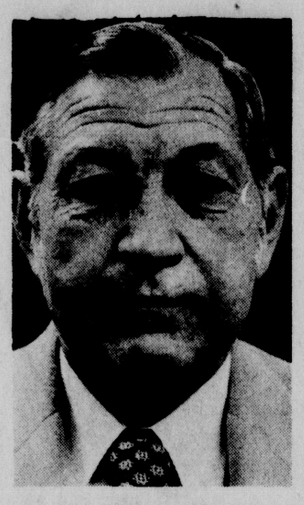

First Baptist to host Bible study

The book of Romans will be the topic for the annual January Bible Study program next week at First Baptist Church, 1101 N. Main St. The study will begin Monday and continue at 7 o'clock each evening through Friday.

The Rev. Homer L. Stallings of Charleston Route One will be the instructor for the five-session study of the plan of salvation and spiritual growth and development presented in Romans by the Apostle Paul.

The Rev. Mr. Stallings, who is nearing completion of his 18th year as pastor of New Bethel Baptist Church near Charleston, is a former member of First Baptist Church, where he was converted and baptized under the ministry of the Rev. E.D. Owen who ended a 20-year pastorate here in 1960.

In addition to serving as pastor of New Bethel Church, the Rev. Mr. Stallings is director of advertising for The Daily Standard.

Church leader's business dealings are scrutinized

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — The Springfield News and Leader said Saturday that deposits by the general council of the Assemblies of God in the Empire State Bank reached as much as $1.6 million when the Rev. Thomas Zimmerman was serving simultaneously as general superintendent of the denomination and chairman of the bank.

The News and Leader's copyright story said the figure was confirmed in interviews with Zimmerman and the Rev. Raymond Hudson, treasurer of the general council.

It also said both men denied the volume of deposits was connected with Zimmerman's being the bank's chairman.

Zimmerman also said he did not have any interest in a proposed shopping mall at Interstate 44 and Missouri 13 at the northwest corner of Springfield at the time Empire Bank loaned the developers $688,540 on Dec. 13, 1973.

Zimmerman acknowledged that he and two associates in the Assemblies of God, Donald Shelton and Milton F. McCorcle, bought 100 acres adjoining the proposed Phoenix Village and near his home for $155,000.

Springfield is international headquarters for the Assemblies of God, an evangelical denomination with about 700,000 members in almost 9,000 congregations.

The newspaper said the three owners of the 100 acres had differing versions of how the head of the church became interested in the tract.

Zimmerman said he had not thought about it until he became aware that two active and respected members of the Assemblies of God at Fort Smith, Ark., Jewell Morris and Howard Gentry, were trying to develop Phoenix Village.

Zimmerman said Morris and Gentry shared their plans with him because they "knew of my interest in the church and in the project." He said and Gentry confirmed that Gentry has made large contributions to the church.

Zimmerman aknowledged it was his position in the church that enabled him to receive inside information that property in the area around the proposed shopping mall was likely to increase in value.

"I see nothing wrong with a man making a personal investment if he's in the position to do so," the News and Leader quoted Zimmerman.

Zimmerman indicated he invited Shelton and McCorcle to join in ownership of the property.

Shelton, who is head of the denomination's department of stewardship, told the News and Leader as he remembers it he asked McCorcle to look for some good investment property in the Phoenix Village area and McCorcle found the 100 acres.

McCorcle reported an option was obtained on the 100 acres about one month before Empire Bank made its loan to Morris and Gentry, and McCorcle and Shelton said Zimmerman did not buy an interest until Shelton invited him to.

The land which Morris and Gentry got with the loan was bought from Shelton, who said he assembled it for them over a period of about one year.

When the loan was made, Zimmerman was a director of the bank but was not chairman or an operating officer. He told the News and Leader he does not remember whether he attended the board meeting which approved the loan. The bank's records show it was unanimously approved by the directors.

"The fact is that I didn't have any interest in the shopping center, and I don't now," Zimmerman said.

Etsyl Sparkman, former president of the bank, told the News and Leader in a telephone interview from his home at Fort Smith that Zimmerman had disavowed any interest in the shopping mall but Sparkman knew at the time that Zimmerman had an option on the 100 acres.

"When he told me he had no interest he seemed to have an active interest," Sparkman was quoted. "His comment served no purpose. He didn't need to say anything at all."

Dr. Robert H. Spense, president of Evangel, said he had been told about such an offer but the college has not received any gifts from Gentry and he has not talked to him during the 2½ years Spense has been at Evangel.

Portageville man to be licensed to preach

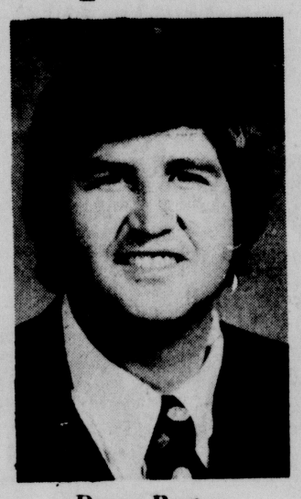

PORTAGEVILLE — During the 6 p.m. service Sunday at Trinity Baptist Church, Danny Burton will give testimony to how he has been called into the gospel ministry. After the testimony, he will be licensed to preach and will receive a certificate which indicates that he has given sufficient evidence to Trinity Baptist Church that God has called him to preach the gospel.

Born and reared in Portageville, Burton is the son of R.B. and Geneva Burton and the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Girvin and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Burton. He is married to the former Gail Thacker.

A graduate of Portageville High School in 1965, he continued his education at the University of Mississippi in Oxford, Miss., and graduated from SeMo State University at Cape Girardeau in 1970. He is presently employed by the New Madrid R1 School District as a social studies teacher at Portageville.

Burton plans to enroll in Mid-America Baptist Seminary in Memphis this June.

The service is open to the public.

Minister admits church held nude therapy sessions

INGLESIDE, Ill. (AP) — The minister of a United Methodist Church says a counseling program conducted by his church included nude therapy sessions.

"We are trying to find some way for our children to withstand the onslaught of sexuality that is stressed in advertising, television programs and in other ways," said the Rev. Louis Hillendahl, pastor of the United Methodist Church in this hamlet 40 miles northwest of Chicago.

The Rev. Mr. Hillendahl, 56, said the sessions were held in 1975 and lasted about two months with 25-30 men and women participating. He said there were about six experiments, some involving physical contact, but none involving sexual intercourse.

At least one of the sessions—which a woman participant said was the first one and begin spontaneously—was held in the church building.

The nude therapy sessions first surfaced during two child custody cases in which the husbands charged their wives were unfit mothers because they participated in the sessions, according to the Chicago Daily News.

The minister did not deny reports that the nude sessions included a weekend retreat at a motel in Kenosha, Wis. The Rev. Mr. Hillendahl also would not deny a report that he and church leaders led therapy sessions in which men, women and children breast-fed on women.

"One of the things we tested was the theory that persons are not sexually aroused by what they see, but rather by a series of fantasies in thought processes," said the pastor.

The Rev. Mr. Hillendahl said Dr. Robert Schumm, the United Methodist Church's district superintendent, "was kept informed about what we were doing and said that we had his full support."

Mormons to present program Wednesday

A Meet the Mormons program will be presented from 7 to 9 p.m. Wednesday in the Security National Bank community room, 625 N. Main St., to provide information about the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter DaySaints and the Mormon faith.

Speakers will be Elders Chris Hatch and Boyd Bingham, who are assistants to the mission president in Nashville, Tenn.

Also, two films will be shown, and the questions: Where did I come from? Why am I here? and Where am I going? will be answered.

Religious leaders denounce the Rev. Sun Moon

NEW YORK (AP) — Leaders of Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish organizations have denounced the Rev. Sun Myung Moon and his Unification Church as "anti-democratic, anti-Jewish and in direct conflict with basic Christian teachings."

At a news conference here Dec. 28, leaders of the religious groups accused the Rev. Mr. Moon of fostering hatred and bigotry against Christians and Jews and encouraging the breakup of families.

Appearing at the news conference were the Rev. James J. LeBar of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York; the Rev. Dr. Jorge Lara-Braud of the National Council of Churches, which includes Protestant and Orthodox denominations; Rabbi Marc H. Tanenbaum; and Rabbi A. James Rudin of the American Jewish Committee.

Shawn Byrn, a Moon movement staff member who identified himself as an inactive Catholic priest from Ireland, rose to defend the Rev. Mr. Moon as a proponent of peace, love and "antifaithlessness" to God. He said anti-Jewish and anti-Christian teachings of the Rev. Mr. Moon's church were exaggerated.

The religious leaders urged Congress to press its investigation of the Rev. Mr. Moon's alleged involvement with the South Korean central intelligence agency and reported illegal lobbying and bribery. They called for Americans to reject the Rev. Mr. Moon's appeals to patriotism and unity.

THE BIBLE
No. 274. The King's Dream

During the second year of his reign, King Nebuchadnezzar was troubled by a mysterious, frightening dream; however, when he awoke, he could not recall the dreams. He ordered his astrologers, magicians and sorcerers to recall the dream or face destruction. Daniel and his three companions prayed to God and received the dream and the interpretation, and Daniel gave it to the king.

"Then the king Nebuchadnezzar fell upon his face, and worshipped Daniel, and commanded that they should offer an oblation and sweet odours unto him." (Daniel 2:46)

"Then the king made Daniel a great man, and gave him many great gifts, and made him ruler over the whole province of Babylon, and chief of the governors over all the wise men of Babylon. Then Daniel requested of the king, and he set Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, over the affairs of the province of Babylon: but Daniel sat in the gate of the king." (Daniel 2:48-49)

KENNETT — Approximately 1,500 delegates from southeast Missouri and northeast Arkansas are expected in Kennett Jan. 22 and 23 for the semi-annual circuit convention of Jehovah's Witnesses at the American Legion Community Building.

Sponsored by the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, the convention will have the theme, "Rendering Sacred Service With Your Power of Reason," drawn from Romans 12:1 and 2 in the Bible.

Highlight of the weekend assembly will be the address, "Keep Seeking God's Kingdom," delivered by Gerald D. Grizzle, a traveling representative of the Watchtower Society.

A number of local men will help staff the 16 departments that have been organized to operate the two-day conclave, according to Cleo Cunningham, presiding overseer of the Kennett Witnesses.

Don Davidson of Kennett will help manage a special food service department to provide refreshments for the delegates while the convention is in session. Davidson said, however, many delegates will take evening meals in local restaurants since there are no evening sessions planned.

Don Nagel and Marvin Thompson of Kennett will operate the convention's rooming Department, Cunningham said, adding that delegates will be placed in motels with a 20-mile radius of Kennett.

Other area men who will staff the convention are William Butler of Hayti, information, lost and found department; Finis Archer of Hayti, literature, magazines and territory department; Douglas Wight of Steele, sound department; and Steve Oliver of Piggott, Ark., volunteer service department.

The convention will be open to the public and all seats are free.

Church leader's business dealings are scrutinized

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — The Springfield News and Leader said Saturday that deposits by the general council of the Assemblies of God in the Empire State Bank reached as much as $1.6 million when the Rev. Thomas Zimmerman was serving simultaneously as general superintendent of the denomination and chairman of the bank.

The News and Leader's copyright story said the figure was confirmed in interviews with Zimmerman and the Rev. Raymond Hudson, treasurer of the general council.

It also said both men denied the volume of deposits was connected with Zimmerman's being the bank's chairman.

Zimmerman also said he did not have any interest in a proposed shopping mall at Interstate 44 and Missouri 13 at the northwest corner of Springfield at the time Empire Bank loaned the developers $688,540 on Dec. 13, 1973.

Zimmerman acknowledged that he and two associates in the Assemblies of God, Donald Shelton and Milton F. McCorcle, bought 100 acres adjoining the proposed Phoenix Village and near his home for $155,000.

Springfield is international headquarters for the Assemblies of God, an evangelical denomination with about 700,000 members in almost 9,000 congregations.

The newspaper said the three owners of the 100 acres had differing versions of how the head of the church became interested in the tract.

Zimmerman said he had not thought about it until he became aware that two active and respected members of the Assemblies of God at Fort Smith, Ark., Jewell Morris and Howard Gentry, were trying to develop Phoenix Village.

Zimmerman said Morris and Gentry shared their plans with him because they "knew of my interest in the church and in the project." He said and Gentry confirmed that Gentry has made large contributions to the church.

Zimmerman aknowledged it was his position in the church that enabled him to receive inside information that property in the area around the proposed shopping mall was likely to increase in value.

"I see nothing wrong with a man making a personal investment if he's in the position to do so," the News and Leader quoted Zimmerman.

Zimmerman indicated he invited Shelton and McCorcle to join in ownership of the property.

Shelton, who is head of the denomination's department of stewardship, told the News and Leader as he remembers it he asked McCorcle to look for some good investment property in the Phoenix Village area and McCorcle found the 100 acres.

McCorcle reported an option was obtained on the 100 acres about one month before Empire Bank made its loan to Morris and Gentry, and McCorcle and Shelton said Zimmerman did not buy an interest until Shelton invited him to.

The land which Morris and Gentry got with the loan was bought from Shelton, who said he assembled it for them over a period of about one year.

When the loan was made, Zimmerman was a director of the bank but was not chairman or an operating officer. He told the News and Leader he does not remember whether he attended the board meeting which approved the loan. The bank's records show it was unanimously approved by the directors.

"The fact is that I didn't have any interest in the shopping center, and I don't now," Zimmerman said.

Etsyl Sparkman, former president of the bank, told the News and Leader in a telephone interview from his home at Fort Smith that Zimmerman had disavowed any interest in the shopping mall but Sparkman knew at the time that Zimmerman had an option on the 100 acres.

"When he told me he had no interest he seemed to have an active interest," Sparkman was quoted. "His comment served no purpose. He didn't need to say anything at all."

Dr. Robert H. Spense, president of Evangel, said he had been told about such an offer but the college has not received any gifts from Gentry and he has not talked to him during the 2½ years Spense has been at Evangel.

Minister admits church held nude therapy sessions

INGLESIDE, Ill. (AP) — The minister of a United Methodist Church says a counseling program conducted by his church included nude therapy sessions.

"We are trying to find some way for our children to withstand the onslaught of sexuality that is stressed in advertising, television programs and in other ways," said the Rev. Louis Hillendahl, pastor of the United Methodist Church in this hamlet 40 miles northwest of Chicago.

The Rev. Mr. Hillendahl, 56, said the sessions were held in 1975 and lasted about two months with 25-30 men and women participating. He said there were about six experiments, some involving physical contact, but none involving sexual intercourse.

At least one of the sessions—which a woman participant said was the first one and begin spontaneously—was held in the church building.

The nude therapy sessions first surfaced during two child custody cases in which the husbands charged their wives were unfit mothers because they participated in the sessions, according to the Chicago Daily News.

The minister did not deny reports that the nude sessions included a weekend retreat at a motel in Kenosha, Wis. The Rev. Mr. Hillendahl also would not deny a report that he and church leaders led therapy sessions in which men, women and children breast-fed on women.

"One of the things we tested was the theory that persons are not sexually aroused by what they see, but rather by a series of fantasies in thought processes," said the pastor.

The Rev. Mr. Hillendahl said Dr. Robert Schumm, the United Methodist Church's district superintendent, "was kept informed about what we were doing and said that we had his full support."

Religious leaders denounce the Rev. Sun Moon

NEW YORK (AP) — Leaders of Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish organizations have denounced the Rev. Sun Myung Moon and his Unification Church as "anti-democratic, anti-Jewish and in direct conflict with basic Christian teachings."

At a news conference here Dec. 28, leaders of the religious groups accused the Rev. Mr. Moon of fostering hatred and bigotry against Christians and Jews and encouraging the breakup of families.

Appearing at the news conference were the Rev. James J. LeBar of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York; the Rev. Dr. Jorge Lara-Braud of the National Council of Churches, which includes Protestant and Orthodox denominations; Rabbi Marc H. Tanenbaum; and Rabbi A. James Rudin of the American Jewish Committee.

Shawn Byrn, a Moon movement staff member who identified himself as an inactive Catholic priest from Ireland, rose to defend the Rev. Mr. Moon as a proponent of peace, love and "antifaithlessness" to God. He said anti-Jewish and anti-Christian teachings of the Rev. Mr. Moon's church were exaggerated.

The religious leaders urged Congress to press its investigation of the Rev. Mr. Moon's alleged involvement with the South Korean central intelligence agency and reported illegal lobbying and bribery. They called for Americans to reject the Rev. Mr. Moon's appeals to patriotism and unity.

THE BIBLE
No. 274. The King's Dream

During the second year of his reign, King Nebuchadnezzar was troubled by a mysterious, frightening dream; however, when he awoke, he could not recall the dreams. He ordered his astrologers, magicians and sorcerers to recall the dream or face destruction. Daniel and his three companions prayed to God and received the dream and the interpretation, and Daniel gave it to the king.

"Then the king Nebuchadnezzar fell upon his face, and worshipped Daniel, and commanded that they should offer an oblation and sweet odours unto him." (Daniel 2:46)

"Then the king made Daniel a great man, and gave him many great gifts, and made him ruler over the whole province of Babylon, and chief of the governors over all the wise men of Babylon. Then Daniel requested of the king, and he set Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, over the affairs of the province of Babylon: but Daniel sat in the gate of the king." (Daniel 2:48-49)

Malden School Board seeking part of city's sales tax for new high school

MALDEN -- The Malden School District is asking the city government for more than $800,000 to help finance construction of anew high school.

Jim Darnell and Gary Hogan, school board members, told the City Council Monday night that the board has voted unanimously to request the funds.

The school's proposal is that the city set aside half of its sales tax revenue and half of its revenue-sharing money for the next five years, earmarking the money for a new high school. Malden, according to statistics furnished by Darnell, receives between $200,000 and $230,000 yearly in sales tax money and about $109,000 annually in revenue-sharing funds.

At the end of five years, Darnell told aldermen, the school's bonding capacity would be $1,272,000 the city's revenue which has been set aside in banks at an interest rate of seven per cent, based on $170,000 per year, would amount to $977,624 — for a total of $2,249,624.

Mayor Sparrel Davis told Darnell that the city has no surplus funds, citing increased operating costs, and said the city could give half its revenue to the school and "would be in worse shape than before." The mayor also questioned the legality of such action.

There are two ways Malden can transfer sales tax and revenue-sharing money to the school, Darnell said. These included: (1) By a vote of the City Council. (2) A petition with 10 per cent of the total people voting in the last general election presented to Council, calling for a special election to let the people vote to give the school district the money.

Allen Black told Davis that "there's seldom a week goes by that people don't ask me how the city is spending its sales tax money." The one cent sales tax has been in effect since April 1974. Davis said a number of factors, including inflation, have contributed to the city's increased operating expenses. They include the elimination of the personal property tax, which costs the city about $15,000 yearly; and about $20,000 in raises for city employes, among other reasons.

Davis told Black that, due to higher operating costs, the sales tax money is being used to retire bonds and for general operating expenses.

He said, in response to Black's insistent requests, that the city would provide him a monthly record of how sales tax funds are utilized.

Hogan said he believes that a law change now enables the city governments to give revenue-sharing funds to schools. Davis, though, said he thinks this would be illegal because part of the school district lies outside the city limits.

The school district has applied for a 100 per cent grant, Darnell said, under the Local Public Works Capital Development and Investment Act of 1976. He said the district's chances of securing the $1,800,000 it's asking for are "very slim" but it would involve no extra cost to taxpayers.

Application has been made through the U. S. Department of Commerce Economic Development Administration, Darnell told aldermen. The state's allotment is $10 million, he said, but that he knows of only one other school in the state which has progressed as far as Malden in applying for the grant.

A vital factor in securing the grant, Darnell pointed out, is the unemployment rate, which he cited at 3 per cent for Malden and 4.1 percent for Dunklin County. The higher the jobless percentage, the better the district's chances of being awarded the grant.

The school is exploring all avenues of getting revenue, Darnell continued. Should the school get the federal grant, it won't need any city money.

Darnell provided aldermen with printed statistics outlining the district's assessed valuation; district growth; bonding capacity; indebtedness; and bond pay off-rates, along with railroad and utilities assessed valuation which could be added to the district's bonding power.

No official action stemmed from the discussion, but alderman Phil Santie recommended that a joint council-school board meeting might be scheduled to further examine the proposal.

Black warned the council that unless the public is told where sales tax money is going, voters may become disillusioned with the city and vote to let the school have the money. Black again asked Davis about disposition of sales tax funds and in particular wanted to know "how much is tied up in the Community Center." Davis said the contract price for the center was $307,000, but changes raised the total to about $312,000. Black also asked if the city acquired the $46,000 from the Board of Public Works to finish paying for the new center, as it said it would in August 1974. Davis said the city acquired $100,000 in 1974 from the Board of Public Works, and got a similar amount in 1975.

Throughout the discussion, Black pressed Davis to account for various expenses, with the mayor repeating reasons of personal property tax losses, pension-plan expenses, addition of three policement to the force, and so on.

Davis cited, on a monthly basis, $25,000 for the city payroll; $3,000 for Social Security; $3,000 for the pension plan; and $3,000 in bond payments. The total ($34,000) must be paid first, Davis said, before the city can consider other expenses. City Clerk Roscoe Thornton told Black that the city's budget has increased almost six times in 10 years to $591,000 yearly.

Conflicts of interest on city boards in another issue he is frequently asked about, Black said, naming several aldermen about whom he has had complaints. There was a general denial of the charges by the aldermen in question and the discussion ended without official action.

The board generally agreed, though, that conflicts of interest are difficult to avoid in small towns, although they are illegal by law.

Black complimented the city's employes on their efficient removal of snow from streets following Sunday's storm.

Malden City Council okays contracts for industrial park improvements

MALDEN -- Three ordiances connected with the Air Base Industrial Park imiprovement projects were approved unanimously this week by the Malden City Council.

The approvals came at the request of Trotter and Associates of Dexter the city's consulting engineering firm. Gary Gaines, a Trotter representative, told the Council the ordinances are necessary to empower the mayor and city clerk to work with the low bidders on the project.

All ordinances were approved on their third and final readings.

Ordinance 2027 authorized the Malden mayor and city clerk to execute an agreement with H. E. and C. F. Blinne Contracting Co., Inc. for its portion of the project; and Ordiannce 2028 did likewise for Bridger Plumbing and Heating Co. for the work on which it was the apparent low bidder.

Ordinance 2029 was also approved, providing for the "condemnation and acquisition of easements of right of way over certain private property within the city limits of Malden . . . for the purpose of installing, maintaining and repairing water mains and a public sanitary sewer system." City Clerk Roscoe Thornton said the affected property lies between Highway 25 North and the St. Louis Southwestern railroad tracks, from the city cemetery north to the vicinity of the Four-County Farm Center, then from near the Chat 'n Chew Restaurant north to the Ellis Jones property.

Gaines told aldermen "everything's moving along smoothly" in regard to the project.

The engineer also told aldermen his firm is still looking at alternative sites for a new sewage treatment plant. The engineers' proposal for locating the plant at a J Highway site met considerable opposition at a public hearing late last summer.

Amos Santie, chairman of the Board of Public Works, said Trotter representatives also met with the board Monday night, but alternative locations were not discussed. Santie says he is aware that the engineers have looked at two other sites, one further west toward Crowley;s Ridge and another on the Air Base, but Trotter still believes the original site would be the best.

A public hearing will be held when Trotter is ready to present alternative proposals.

In other business, the Council accepted a bid from Kirksey Motors of Malden for a 1977 Oldsmobile Cutlass for $4,069 with the trade-in of a used police car. Without the trade-in option, Kirksey's bid was $4,889.70.

Other bidders were Mustain Motor Co. of Malden, 1977 Plymouth Fury or 1977 Dodge Monaco, outright sale price $4,969 with 45-to-60 day delivery. Dennis Chevrolet of Malden bid on a 1977 Chevrolet Impala, outright sale price of $5,450. Rowe Ford Sales of Malden bid $5,010 (outright sale price) for a 1977 Ford LTD.

Joe Esken of Malden Pasttime Billiards appeared to ask aldermen why a loading zone sign had been erected alongside his building, rather than in front of businesses which used the loading zone. Eskew said he doesn't use the loading zone. The matter was turned over to the Council's street committee to be worked out.

At the request of aldermen Darrell White, the Council voted to have yield signs erected at the intersection of Bland and Norman Drive on Bland and at Montgomery at Norman.

Malden School Board seeking part of city's sales tax for new high school

MALDEN -- The Malden School District is asking the city government for more than $800,000 to help finance construction of anew high school.

Jim Darnell and Gary Hogan, school board members, told the City Council Monday night that the board has voted unanimously to request the funds.

The school's proposal is that the city set aside half of its sales tax revenue and half of its revenue-sharing money for the next five years, earmarking the money for a new high school. Malden, according to statistics furnished by Darnell, receives between $200,000 and $230,000 yearly in sales tax money and about $109,000 annually in revenue-sharing funds.

At the end of five years, Darnell told aldermen, the school's bonding capacity would be $1,272,000 the city's revenue which has been set aside in banks at an interest rate of seven per cent, based on $170,000 per year, would amount to $977,624 —— for a total of $2,249,624.

Mayor Sparrel Davis told Darnell that the city has no surplus funds, citing increased operating costs, and said the city could give half its revenue to the school and "would be in worse shape than before." The mayor also questioned the legality of such action.

There are two ways Malden can transfer sales tax and revenue-sharing money to the school, Darnell said. These included: (1) By a vote of the City Council. (2) A petition with 10 per cent of the total people voting in the last general election presented to Council, calling for a special election to let the people vote to give the school district the money.

Allen Black told Davis that "there's seldom a week goes by that people don't ask me how the city is spending its sales tax money." The one cent sales tax has been in effect since April 1974. Davis said a number of factors, including inflation, have contributed to the city's increased operating expenses. They include the elimination of the personal property tax, which costs the city about $15,000 yearly; and about $20,000 in raises for city employes, among other reasons.

Davis told Black that, due to higher operating costs, the sales tax money is being used to retire bonds and for general operating expenses.

He said, in response to Black's insistent requests, that the city would provide him a monthly record of how sales tax funds are utilized.

Hogan said he believes that a law change now enables the city governments to give revenue-sharing funds to schools. Davis, though, said he thinks this would be illegal because part of the school district lies outside the city limits.

The school district has applied for a 100 per cent grant, Darnell said, under the Local Public Works Capital Development and Investment Act of 1976. He said the district's chances of securing the $1,800,000 it's asking for are "very slim" but it would involve no extra cost to taxpayers.

Application has been made through the U. S. Department of Commerce Economic Development Administration, Darnell told aldermen. The state's allotment is $10 million, he said, but that he knows of only one other school in the state which has progressed as far as Malden in applying for the grant.

A vital factor in securing the grant, Darnell pointed out, is the unemployment rate, which he cited at 3 per cent for Malden and 4.1 percent for Dunklin County. The higher the jobless percentage, the better the district's chances of being awarded the grant.

The school is exploring all avenues of getting revenue, Darnell continued. Should the school get the federal grant, it won't need any city money.

Darnell provided aldermen with printed statistics outlining the district's assessed valuation; district growth; bonding capacity; indebtedness; and bond pay off-rates, along with railroad and utilities assessed valuation which could be added to the district's bonding power.

No official action stemmed from the discussion, but alderman Phil Santie recommended that a joint council-school board meeting might be scheduled to further examine the proposal.

Black warned the council that unless the public is told where sales tax money is going, voters may become disillusioned with the city and vote to let the school have the money. Black again asked Davis about disposition of sales tax funds and in particular wanted to know "how much is tied up in the Community Center." Davis said the contract price for the center was $307,000, but changes raised the total to about $312,000. Black also asked if the city acquired the $46,000 from the Board of Public Works to finish paying for the new center, as it said it would in August 1974. Davis said the city acquired $100,000 in 1974 from the Board of Public Works, and got a similar amount in 1975.

Throughout the discussion, Black pressed Davis to account for various expenses, with the mayor repeating reasons of personal property tax losses, pension-plan expenses, addition of three policement to the force, and so on.

Davis cited, on a monthly basis, $25,000 for the city payroll; $3,000 for Social Security; $3,000 for the pension plan; and $3,000 in bond payments. The total ($34,000) must be paid first, Davis said, before the city can consider other expenses. City Clerk Roscoe Thornton told Black that the city's budget has increased almost six times in 10 years to $591,000 yearly.

Conflicts of interest on city boards in another issue he is frequently asked about, Black said, naming several aldermen about whom he has had complaints. There was a general denial of the charges by the aldermen in question and the discussion ended without official action.

The board generally agreed, though, that conflicts of interest are difficult to avoid in small towns, although they are illegal by law.

Malden City Council okays contracts for industrial park improvements

MALDEN -- Three ordiances connected with the Air Base Industrial Park imiprovement projects were approved unanimously this week by the Malden City Council.

The approvals came at the request of Trotter and Associates of Dexter the city's consulting engineering firm. Gary Gaines, a Trotter representative, told the Council the ordinances are necessary to empower the mayor and city clerk to work with the low bidders on the project.

All ordinances were approved on their third and final readings.

Ordinance 2027 authorized the Malden mayor and city clerk to execute an agreement with H. E. and C. F. Blinne Contracting Co., Inc. for its portion of the project; and Ordiannce 2028 did likewise for Bridger Plumbing and Heating Co. for the work on which it was the apparent low bidder.

Ordinance 2029 was also approved, providing for the "condemnation and acquisition of easements of right of way over certain private property within the city limits of Malden . . . for the purpose of installing, maintaining and repairing water mains and a public sanitary sewer system." City Clerk Roscoe Thornton said the affected property lies between Highway 25 North and the St. Louis Southwestern railroad tracks, from the city cemetery north to the vicinity of the Four-County Farm Center, then from near the Chat 'n Chew Restaurant north to the Ellis Jones property.

Gaines told aldermen "everything's moving along smoothly" in regard to the project.

The engineer also told aldermen his firm is still looking at alternative sites for a new sewage treatment plant. The engineers' proposal for locating the plant at a J Highway site met considerable opposition at a public hearing late last summer.

Amos Santie, chairman of the Board of Public Works, said Trotter representatives also met with the board Monday night, but alternative locations were not discussed. Santie says he is aware that the engineers have looked at two other sites, one further west toward Crowley;s Ridge and another on the Air Base, but Trotter still believes the original site would be the best.

A public hearing will be held when Trotter is ready to present alternative proposals.

In other business, the Council accepted a bid from Kirksey Motors of Malden for a 1977 Oldsmobile Cutlass for $4,069 with the trade-in of a used police car. Without the trade-in option, Kirksey's bid was $4,889.70.

Other bidders were Mustain Motor Co. of Malden, 1977 Plymouth Fury or 1977 Dodge Monaco, outright sale price $4,969 with 45-to-60 day delivery. Dennis Chevrolet of Malden bid on a 1977 Chevrolet Impala, outright sale price of $5,450. Rowe Ford Sales of Malden bid $5,010 (outright sale price) for a 1977 Ford LTD.

Joe Esken of Malden Pasttime Billiards appeared to ask aldermen why a loading zone sign had been erected alongside his building, rather than in front of businesses which used the loading zone. Eskew said he doesn't use the loading zone. The matter was turned over to the Council's street committee to be worked out.

At the request of aldermen Darrell White, the Council voted to have yield signs erected at the intersection of Bland and Norman Drive on Bland and at Montgomery at Norman.

Color photography has taken another decisive step to affirm its status as contetnporary fine art in the big business realm of architectural planning and design. That step was recorded with the recent gala opening of the K & L Gallery of Photographic Art in New York City's mid-Manhattan and its first exhibition of color masterpieces.

The display, entitled "Classics in Time," consisted of 50 examples of superb craftsmanship in photographic vision and in technical achievement by a custom color lab. The photographs represented the creative efforts of a selected group of camera artists which included: Paul Caponigro, John Dominis, Douglas Faulkner, Burt Glinn, Jay Maisel, David Muench, Gordon Parks, Eliot Porter, Co Rentmeester, George Silk, Howard Sochurek, Dennis Stock and Pete Turner. Each is a recognized talent in a special area of color photography.

The dye transfer prints ranged in size from 16 x 20 to 40 x 60 inches, and in value from $600 to $1,750. As "Classics in Time," they are issued in numbered and registered limited editions of 100 prints, plus five artist's proofs, and are protected by a special coded system of registry. The prints, mounts and documentation of ownership are personally signed by the photographer as confirmation of each print's authenticity and quality. It is believed this system and procedure will enhance the value of each photograph as a collector's item in the future. It also permits transfer of ownership at any time.

The K & L Gallery is open to the public free of charge on Fridays from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. and, at other times, by appointment only. Arrangements can be made through the Gallery's director, Jay Bjornsen, 222 E. 44th St., New York, N.Y. 10017.

According to Ken Lieberman, executive vice president of K & L, the gallery will serve the growing needs of architects, interior designers and art consultants working for corporations, institutions and other clients.

"This group recognizes that we are in a new era of fine art," says Lieberman, ". . . the art of color photography. Our talented photographers are creative artists producing images of beauty which have wide and enduring appeal and which complement today's trend toward stimulating environments in offices, buildings and homes.

"Until now, there hasn't been one central source for a collection of magnificent color photographs of wide-ranging diversification," he added. "The K & L Gallery of Photographic Art brings together the eyes of photography's finest contemporary artists and the top craftsmanship of custom lab services to produce these stunning images."

Besides the wide range of color prints on display, visitors or prospective clients may see additional images in a private screening room from a large collection of slide transparencies. A selection can be made from the work of a particular photographer or of a specific subject such as landscapes, seascapes, nature subjects, animals, boating or underwater scenes, abstract impressions or vibrant color graphics.

When selected, images can be tailored to individual specifications to suit a design application. Unlike "Classics in Time," they can be made in all size ranges and, if economy is a factor, they are available unsigned or as Ektacolor prints instead of dye transfer.

K & L guarantees its dye transfer prints for 50 years because the process assures greater permanence, color fidelity and picture sharpness. The less expensive Ektacolor prints have a 25-year guarantee.

Berkey, K & L Lab, affiliated with the K & L Gallery of Photographic Art, is said to be the world's largest custom photographic lab. It has been commissioned to produce color prints for the United States Information Agency, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Museum of Modern Art, the International Center of Photography and other major organizations.

The K & L Gallery of Photographic Art itself is an interesting example of design application to stretch its boundaries beyond its apparent limits. It does this with sliding exhibit walls on two sides of the gallery.

Q: How can I determine if the insulation in my house is still effective?

A: A professional insulation contractor can give you the most complete heat- loss analysis, and also suggest the most effective way to correct the problem if there is one. Simple observation on your part might indicate a need for more insulation. Use your hand as a sensitive instrument for feeling hot and cold "zones" on an outside wall on a cold day. First touch an outside wall, then quickly touch an inside wall. Is the outside wall much colder: Other indications of poor or no insulation: are your electrical outlets drafty? Is there an isicle buildup on your roof? Does snow melt on your roof when it seems to blanket other roofs on the block? Is your home intolerably hot in the summer?

If you wish to do a more thorough investigation of your home by yourself, check gable-ends in the attic, or select an area with an outside wall, such as a stairway closet or recessed medicine cabinet. Remove part of the wallboard to see if there's any insulation inside. It's possible that you have some, but it may have settled through the years. If you are doing an inspection by yourself, be extremely careful of electrical wiring!

Q: Is it true that some houses in the Midwest don't have any insulation in walls?

A: Yes, when fuel costs were low and before building codes set specifications as they do now, people didn't see much point in insulating. Many of the man-made materials we now use for insulating weren't even on the market, such as fiberglass batts which weren't in use until after World War II. Even today's building code insulation specifications don't take into account the spiraling cost of fuel, so any additional insulation you add above code will save money. If your home was built before 1950, chances are that you have little, if any, insulation.

Q: How much heat can be lost from the roof?

A: On a single story or rambler home, about 40 per cent; on a two-story home, approximately a third. The difference in the two proportions is that the two story home has less roof area and more side-wall area.

Q: Can I put in too much insulation?

A: No, especially with the price of fuel going up every year. Technically, there is an economic maxim called the law of diminishing returns, which can account for the exception. For instance, if you already have 15 inches of ceiling insulation and plan to add another 15 inches, the additional protection won't do that much good in terms of saving on fuel costs compared to the dollar amount invested in the insulation.

Q: How is insulation effectiveness measured?

A: The measurement is called "R-factor" (sometimes "R-number").

This states the resistance (R) per inch of the insulating product to the passage of heat in any direction. The greater the R number, the greater the insulating value or resistance to heat flow. In the past, people used to use the thickness of the insulating product as an indication of insulation value. Since thickness doesn't necessarily mean effectiveness, this measure is not accurate.

HOW MUCH IS YOUR HOME WORTH?

You probably remember very well what you paid for it. That's the first thing most folks think of ... what it COST THEM. But, unless you bought it only recently, the purchase price is only one indication of its true worth today ... and not a very good one, at that. Conditions change. Neighborhoods improve -- or deteriorate. Alterations and improvements in the house affect its value. Dozens of considerations enter into an intelligent appraisal, making this almost a science in itself. Appraising is a specialty of ours. If you would like to know what your home is REALLY worth today, pick up your phone and call

HOW MUCH IS YOUR HOME WORTH?

You probably remember very well what you paid for it. That's the first thing most folks think of ... what it COST THEM. But, unless you bought it only recently, the purchase price is only one indication of its true worth today ... and not a very good one, at that. Conditions change. Neighborhoods improve -- or deteriorate. Alterations and improvements in the house affect its value. Dozens of considerations enter into an intelligent appraisal, making this almost a science in itself. Appraising is a specialty of ours. If you would like to know what your home is REALLY worth today, pick up your phone and call

But the warmer temperatures may be only temporary as the National Weather Service has put colder temperatures -- and more snow -- into its extended forecast.

The low tonight will be around 20. Saturday will be warm with a high around 30, but Sunday through Tuesday the temperatures will once again be in the 10-to-20-degree range. There is a chance of snow Sunday through Tuesday. The weather service did not give accumulation for the snow.

Commander of the Coast Guard Second District has urged the suspension of all towboat activity on the Mississippi River from Cairo, Ill., to St. Louis.

A spokesman from R. Adm. Wayne E. Caldwell said the recommendation for closing river traffic was based on ice blockage of the channel and extremely low river levels due to drought.

A towing company spokesman said that more than 100 barges have gone aground during the past three days near Cape Girardeau. A search is under way for one barge that sunk Thursday near Cape Girardeau.

"All the veterans with whom I've talked say this is the worst combination of ice and low water they have ever seen on this section of the Mississippi," the spokesman said.

Schools closed today because of the weather were Sikeston, New Madrid R-1, Risco, Scott Central R-5, Kelly, Charleston, Richland, Essex, Gray Ridge, Dexter, Bell City, Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA) 7000 project at the Semo Skills Center in Sikeston and night classes at Southeast Missouri State University. Night classes will resume on Monday.

He said the woman probably died shortly after the fire started.

Banken said the cause of the fire has not been pinned down, but it is theorized the woman had something cooking on the stove which caught fire.

When the firemen arrived, the house was engulfed in flames.

Leslie McMunn, who owns the house and a business across the street, reportedly saw the fire and called the fire department. Two trucks and 16 firemen answered the call.

"Our first concern was getting the occupant out," Banken said, "then we actually got to cutting and digging an putting the fire out. We were there about three hours."

It was a difficult fire to fight because the house had wooden shingles on it, Banken said.

A state fire marshal was called in to make an initial investigation but will not conduct a full investigation because it is not needed, Banken said.

Police were not called to investigate the fire, according to Banken, who said it was the opinion of the Dexter Fire Department that there was no need for an investigation into the fire.

"There was no foul play whatsoever," Banken said this morning.

The house was a total loss.

Rainey said the woman lived alone.

He said he doubts if he will call a coroner's jury, and no autopsy has been performed.

Mrs. Davis was born Feb. 23, 1937 in New Palestine, Ind., and moved to Dexter in 1966.

On July 15, 1959 at Petersburg, Va., she married Marion Lee Davis, who died March 19, 1975.

Survivors include two sons, Michael Allen and Ronald Lloyd Davis of Dexter.

Friends may call at Watkins & Sons Funeral Home, where services are scheduled at 1 p.m. Saturday with the Rev. Frank Heitman officiating.

Chandler's Wobble

As it rotates, the earth wobbles on its axis. This deviation, known as Chandler's Wobble, reaches its peak every seventh year, and some scientists believe earthquakes are more numerous in those years. The next peak year will be 1978.

Spiders provided the decor for an extravagant double wedding in Louisiana in 1870. Planter Charles Durand had his workmen release spiders in the three-mile avenue of trees leading to his manor. After the spiders had spun their gossamer arches between the trees, the workmen used bellows to blow silver and gold dust into the webs beneath which Durand's two daughters wed their sweethearts.

Commander of the Coast Guard Second District has urged the suspension of all towboat activity on the Mississippi River from Cairo, Ill., to St. Louis.

A spokesman from R. Adm. Wayne E. Caldwell said the recommendation for closing river traffic was based on ice blockage of the channel and extremely low river levels due to drought.

A towing company spokesman said that more than 100 barges have gone aground during the past three days near Cape Girardeau. A search is under way for one barge that sunk Thursday near Cape Girardeau.

"All the veterans with whom I've talked say this is the worst combination of ice and low water they have ever seen on this section of the Mississippi," the spokesman said.

Schools closed today because of the weather were Sikeston, New Madrid R-1, Risco, Scott Central R-5, Kelly, Charleston, Richland, Essex, Gray Ridge, Dexter, Bell City, Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA) 7000 project at the Semo Skills Center in Sikeston and night classes at Southeast Missouri State University. He said the woman probably died shortly after the fire started.

Banken said the cause of the fire has not been pinned down, but it is theorized the woman had something cooking on the stove which caught fire.

When the firemen arrived, the house was engulfed in flames.

Leslie McMunn, who owns the house and a business across the street, reportedly saw the fire and called the fire department. Two trucks and 16 firemen answered the call.

"Our first concern was getting the occupant out," Banken said, "then we actually got to cutting and digging an putting the fire out. We were there about three hours."

It was a difficult fire to fight because the house had wooden shingles on it, Banken said.

A state fire marshal was called in to make an initial investigation but will not conduct a full investigation because it is not needed, Banken said.

Police were not called to investigate the fire, according to Banken, who said it was the opinion of the Dexter Fire Department that there was no need for an investigation into the fire.

"There was no foul play whatsoever," Banken said this morning.

The house was a total loss.

Rainey said the woman lived alone.

He said he doubts if he will call a coroner's jury, and no autopsy has been performed.

Chandler's Wobble

As it rotates, the earth wobbles on its axis. This deviation, known as Chandler's Wobble, reaches its peak every seventh year, and some scientists believe earthquakes are more numerous in those years. The next peak year will be 1978.

Spiders provided the decor for an extravagant double wedding in Louisiana in 1870. Planter Charles Durand had his workmen release spiders in the three-mile avenue of trees leading to his manor. After the spiders had spun their gossamer arches between the trees, the workmen used bellows to blow silver and gold dust into the webs beneath which Durand's two daughters wed their sweethearts.
